PREFACE

The Government of the United Kingdom has the honor to acknowledge the valuable assistance of the Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the Hon. the Secretary of State for the Admiralty, in the preparation of this work.

The necessity of a more complete knowledge of the part of the minister of the Church, is not less than that of the minister of the State, for the due performance of which, without such knowledge, they cannot be said to be fully qualified. It is not less necessary for the minister of the Church, to be acquainted with the history, and the principles of the constitution of the Church, than it is for the minister of the State, to be acquainted with the history, and the principles of the constitution of the State.

The Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, has the honor to acknowledge the valuable assistance of the Hon. the Secretary of State for the Admiralty, in the preparation of this work.

P R E F A C E .

The present work is respectfully offered to the Catholic clergy and others concerned, as a handbook, containing a concise explanation of the Ecclesiastical Chant, and a selection of Gregorian melodies used in the ordinary and occasional services of the Church. The original design of the compiler was to prepare for the press a little Manual containing only the Roman psalm-tones, with a few additional pieces of chant, for the use of a particular ecclesiastical institution. He has been induced to offer to the public the Manual in its present form, by the advice of Rt. Rev. Prelates, and Rev. Clergymen, desirous of seeing such a book published, for the use of seminaries, clerical choirs, and churches.

The necessity of some knowledge of chant, on the part of the ministers of the Church, is evident from the nature of their sacred functions, for the due performance of which, without such knowledge, they cannot be said to be fully qualified; for, they will not be able to sing, as they ought to do, their own part of the Liturgy, nor to regulate in an efficient manner the music of the churches over which they preside. Hence, the Council of Trent, speaking of the institution of Seminaries, prescribes that the ecclesiastical chant should be taught in them, as an integral part of clerical education: . . . . grammatices, cantus, . . . . aliarumque bonarum artium disciplinam discent. (Cap. 18, Sess. 23, de Refor.) And the Council of Rome, held in the year 1725, enjoins the same: . . . . cantum Gregorianum (clerici) addiscant. (Tit. 16, cap. 3.) A textbook of Gregorian Chant, neither too diffuse, nor, on the other hand, too compendious, cannot therefore but be a desideratum in every ecclesiastical institution; and it is hoped that, in the absence of any such book in our language, the present Manual will be found useful, at least, until a better work of the kind is offered to the public.

The Manual of Roman Chant is compiled chiefly from the following authentic sources, viz: Istituzioni di Canto Fermo, da O. Pernarelli, Sacerdote della Missione, Roma, 1844, a work highly esteemed in Rome, and from which we take the materials for Part I. of our Manual; and the celebrated Directorium Chori* of Guidetti, the standard Roman choral book, from which the greater part of the chants contained in our Manual are reprinted. Moreover, we have borrowed much valuable matter from the Catholic Psalmist, Dublin, 1858, a work compiled mostly from Roman sources, and in conformity with Roman usages, in the matter of ecclesiastical music.

* The Directorium Chori was first published at Rome, in 1582, subsequently in 1589, 1604, 1642, 1665, and finally in 1737, to say nothing of editions published in other cities. The editions made use of for our Manual, are those of 1642 and 1737, Rome, principally the latter. All the pieces of chant contained in the Manual are re-printed from the Directorium Chori, except those otherwise marked.

The square notation has been adopted in this work, not from an absolute preference of it to the modern notation, but because the Manual is intended chiefly for the use of clergymen, ecclesiastical students, etc., who find the liturgical and choral books printed with the square notes, with which they must consequently render themselves familiar. Great pains have been taken, however, by means of the explanations throughout Part I., and the figures at the end of § II, ch. iv, Part III., (see p. 108, et seq.,) to divest the plain-chant notation of the difficulties so commonly supposed to be inseparable from it, and to render it easy, with a little practice, to singers accustomed only to modern music.

A Supplement has been added to the Manual, with an especial view to the correct performance of the Vesper Service, which it will be found to render comparatively easy.

Should the Manual be the means, with the blessing of God, of enhancing in some measure the majesty and devotional effect of the public worship of the Catholic Church, the compiler will have accomplished the end which he had alone in view in undertaking his labors.

ADVERTISEMENT.

The present work is divided into three parts.

In Part I. is given a concise explanation of the Gregorian notation used in our days, of the musical intervals occurring in plain-chant, and of the structure and peculiarities of the Ecclesiastical Modes, or Tones.

Part II. gives the principal rules of Psalmody, and the genuine Roman melodies for the Psalms and Canticles. The Magnificat is printed with full notation for each of the Eight Tones, rendering it an easy matter to chant this sublime canticle according to the prescriptions of the Antiphonarium.

Part III. treats in detail of the manner of singing the Divine Office, viz: Vespers, Matins and Mass, for which it also gives the regular chants, from the Directorium Chori of Guidetti.

Copious Appendices have been added, comprising chants pertaining to the ordinary services of the Church, but which may vary, e. g., the melodies of Hymns, Masses, etc., as also chants used on extraordinary occasions, such as are the Tenebræ Offices, the Forty Hours' Exposition, Processions, Burials, Pontifical Functions, etc.,—the whole re-printed either from Guidetti, or from other works of the kind sanctioned by Roman usage.

A SHORT GRAMMAR OF ROMAN CHANT.<sup>1</sup>

PRELIMINARY NOTIONS.

1.—Song, or Chant, in the most comprehensive sense of either word, is defined to be an artificial modulation of the voice, by means of intervals expressive of different affections of the soul.

2.—The simultaneous and artificial union of different voices, not singing the same notes, produces what is called harmony, in the modern sense of the word.

3.—The expressions melody, and, in a more restricted sense, chant, indicate a pleasing succession of sounds, executed by one voice, or by many voices singing the same notes.

4.—A melody may have a rhythmical form, and be sung in a determined movement; or, it may lack a rhythmical form, and be executed without a determined movement. In the former case, we have what is called figured chant; in the latter, plain-song, or plain-chant.

5.—The chant with which our Manual is concerned, is a species of plain-song which the Catholic Church uses in the public celebration of the Divine worship. It is based upon the ancient Greek music, and was adopted and modified for the use of the Latin Church by Pope S. Gregory the Great, whence it has obtained the name of Gregorian chant. It is also called Roman chant, from its primitive institution at Rome, where it was always held in honor, and whence it was propagated throughout Christendom, by the exertions of the Sovereign Pontiffs. And as we profess to give, in our Manual, the specific chant contained in the authorized choral books of Rome, we employ for the most part, in preference, the expression Roman Chant, or, as a synonym, plain-chant.

<sup>1</sup> In this part of the work we have aimed at the greatest possible brevity consistent with a clear explanation of the most important points in the matter under consideration.

CHAPTER I.

CHARACTERS USED IN ROMAN CHANT.

1.—We premise that the melodies of Roman chant, collectively taken, are comprised within a series of sixteen notes, or sounds, extending from the G of modern notation, on the first line of the staff signed with the Bass clef, to A, on the second space of the staff with the G clef. Taken singly, however, their extent of notes is considerably less. Thus, the greatest compass of Gregorian melodies is that of ten, or eleven notes; whilst ordinarily, they are comprised within a compass varying from five to eight notes. It is scarcely necessary to add, that by compass we mean the range, or extent from the lowest to the highest note of a melody.

2.—To represent the melodies resulting from the euphonious collocation of sounds, and thereby enable the singer to execute them at sight, certain conventional characters are used, viz: Notes, (also called Chords,) the Staff, and Clefs; of each of which, omitting, for brevity's sake, the history of their invention and adoption, we shall now give a concise explanation.

§ I.—NOTES.

3.—Notes, or figures, so called, are used to represent sounds, and may be viewed in a twofold light. A note may indicate a sound with reference to its duration in point of time, or, with reference to its gravity or acuteness—in other words, its pitch.

4.—Considered from the former point of view, the notes used in the actual Roman chant are three: the Long (■), the Breve (■), and the Semibreve (◆); concerning the relative value of which, as indicative of different durations of time, the Directorium Chori teaches, that the Breve must be sung in the time of one, the Semibreve in half that time, and the Long in the time of one and a half. These proportions are, however, given as approximate only, and cannot always be rigidly observed.

5.—The notes, whether Longs, Breves, or Semibreves, as representatives of sounds differing in pitch, have received respectively the names Do, Re, Mi, Fa, Sol, La, Si,—an ascending series, corresponding entirely to the modern scale C, D, E, F, G, A, B.<sup>1</sup> They may be repeated, at pleasure, above and below. Thus, to ascend higher than Si, a new series must be commenced, beginning from Do, and ascending as before; and to descend below Do, a new series must be commenced, beginning with Si, and descending La, Sol, Fa, and so forth.

6.—These names, Do, Re, Mi, Fa, etc., are respectively given to the notes according to their position on the Staff, of which we shall now speak.

§ II.—THE STAFF.

7.—The elevation or depression of the voice in singing is indicated by the notes being placed on the higher or lower degrees of what is called the Staff, which, in the notation of Roman chant, consists of four parallel lines. The notes are placed on the lines, or between them,—also below the lower line, and above the upper one; so that the staff contains nine degrees. The degrees are always counted upward.

EXAMPLE.

The three degrees between the lines are called spaces; the third degree is called the first space, the fifth degree, the second space, and the seventh degree, the third space. The tenth degree is called a leger-line, and is sometimes added to avoid the transposition of the Clef, of which hereafter. Sometimes, for the same reason, a leger-line is added below the first degree.

8.—When notes on the Staff follow each other in such order as not to omit, in their passage, any of the lines or spaces, they are said to be by conjunctive degrees—in the opposite case, by disjunctive degrees.

PASSAGE BY CONJUNCTIVE DEGREES.

PASSAGE BY DISJUNCTIVE DEGREES.

9.—A little sign, called the Guide (♯), is used at the end of a staff, not to be sung, but to indicate on what degree the next note is placed, and thus guard against a mistake in the passage of the eye to the new staff. The Guide is also used immediately before the change and transposition of the clefs, as will be explained in the next §.

10.—To mark the precise sense of the text, and to give the singers an opportunity to take breath in the course of a chant, Bars, or Pauses, are placed on the staff. The single bar indicates a pause for respiration. The double bar marks the end of the chant, or of a part of it, or separates that which is to be sung by the chanters only, or by different choirs.

In o-dó-rem unguentó-rum tu-órum cúrrimus: a-dolescéntulæ di-le-xe-runt te nimis.

11.—The short bars sometimes found on the staff, serve only to show the division of the words of the text: they are, as being of no practical use, omitted in the best Roman choral books. We employ them, however, in our Manual, throughout the Latin text, in the case of what may be called recitative chants, (such as are, c. g. the Prayer, the Epistle, the Gospel, the Psalms, etc.,) to indicate a slight pause for respiration.

§ III.—CLEFS.

12.—The sign which opens to us, as it were, the secret of notation, has received the apt name of Clef, or key, from the Latin word clavis. The Clef is a character placed on the staff, to indicate the name of a note after which the others are to be determined.

13.—The clefs used at present in the notation of Roman chant are four—two natural, and two accidental, or derivative. The two former comprise the clef of Fa (♮), corresponding to the modern Bass clef—and that of Do (♯), corresponding to the Tenor or C clef. The Fa clef, therefore, indicates a note one semitone and three tones lower in pitch than that represented by the Do clef.

14.—The derivative, or accidental clefs comprise that of Do, derived from the Fa clef, and that of Sol, derived from the natural Do clef. Each of these has the same form as its original clef, with this addition, that they have, immediately after them, at the beginning of each staff, a flat<sup>1</sup>—the former, in the second space above it—the latter, in the space immediately below it.

15.—The clefs are severally placed on one of the lines (never in a space) of the staff; and every note placed on the same line with the clef receives the name of the latter, i. e., Fa, Do, or Sol, as the case may be. In other words, the line on which the clef is placed receives a fixed name, Fa, Do, or Sol, and thus furnishes a standard by which to ascertain the names, and consequently the sounds, of all the notes of a given piece. Thus, we wish to sing, for instance, the following melody:—

We must first look at the clef, according to which, the second line is Fa. We then count downward till we reach the first note, which we find to be Re. Counting upward from Re, the next note is found to be Sol, the next, La, the next, Si, and so on. Now, without the clef, we could make nothing out of this melody. The relative positions of the notes on the staff indicate,<sup>1</sup> it is true, that the second note is higher than the first, the third higher than the second, and the fourth higher than any one of them, and so on of the rest;—but how much higher the second is than the first, the third than the second, etc., is a mystery, until we discover what is the name and sound of the first note, upon which the sounds of the others depend,—and this is determined by means of the clef, in the manner we have explained above.

16.—The clef of Do natural may be placed on any one of the lines. The Fa clef is never placed on the first, or lower line, and it is found but rarely on the upper line. The accidental Do clef is placed chiefly on the second, and never on the fourth, or upper line. Finally, the clef of Sol is found regularly on the second, third, and fourth lines.

17.—The clefs, then, in plain-chant, are not, as in modern music, fixed to a particular line of the staff; the fact that in different melodies they are placed differently is accounted for by the limited number of degrees on the staff, and the varying extent of notes in the different pieces of chant. Nay, even in the same melody the clefs may be moved, at the pleasure of the composer, from one line to another, according as the extent of notes requires. Thus, when there are not degrees enough on the staff for the upper notes, the clef must be set down (but always on a line); on the contrary, it must be raised, to gain degrees on which to place such lower notes as could not otherwise be written on the staff. This is called transposing the clef, an example of which may be seen in the Antiphon Salve Regina,<sup>2</sup> at the words Et Jesum, where the note La could not be written on the staff, as is evident, without the transposition of the clef from the second to the third line. Sometimes, the change, or mixture of clefs is used,—that is, when, in the same melody, a modulation occurs from the lower to the upper notes, or vice-versa, so as to encroach, as it were, upon the sphere of the other clef, a change of clefs takes place, the effects of which continue until the melody returns to the sphere of the former clef, which may then be resumed.

18.—It often happens, by reason of the mixture of clefs, that a note actually not lower (sometimes even higher) in pitch, is placed, on the staff, immediately after the introduction of a new clef, some degrees lower, than the last note before the change, and vice-versa,—a surprise, for singers unaccustomed to such a thing, against which the guide serves to guard them, by suggesting in advance the position, according to the old clef, of the note upon which the change of clefs is made. For an example of this, see the chant Christus factus est, etc.,<sup>3</sup> in which, at the word illi, the melody passes into the sphere of the Do clef, which then takes the place of the former clef of Fa. The guide, after the word dedit, indicates the actual pitch of the note following, which has, at first sight, the appearance of being lower than that preceding it, though in reality it has the same sound.

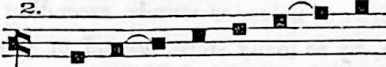

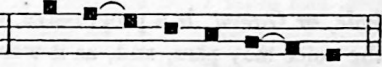

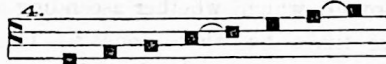

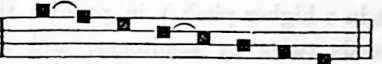

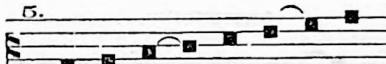

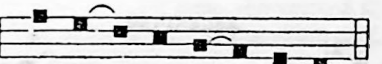

<sup>1</sup> For all we have hitherto seen. In ¶ 18, of the present §, however, we shall see that a note may sometimes be higher on the staff than another, yet be lower in pitch, and vice-versa.

4.—Besides the above diatonic Scale, that of Do, there are five others used in plain-chant, each starting from a different note, and consequently, having its semitones in different places relatively to any of the other Scales,—a circumstance which gives to each its peculiar character. Thus, the scale of Re has its semitones, not, as that of Do has, between the third and fourth, and the seventh and eighth notes, but between the second and third, and the sixth and seventh; and so on of the other scales, as may be seen by the following table.

ASCENDING.	DESCENDING.
2.  Re Mi Fa Sol La Si Do Re	DESCENDING.  Re Do Si La Sol Fa Mi Re
3.  Mi Fa Sol La Si Do Re Mi	DESCENDING.  Mi Re Do Si La Sol Fa Mi
4.  Fa Sol La Si Do Re Mi Fa	DESCENDING.  Fa Mi Re Do Si La Sol Fa
5.  Sol La Si Do Re Mi Fa Sol	DESCENDING.  Sol Fa Mi Re Do Si La Sol
6.  La Si Do Re Mi Fa Sol La	DESCENDING.  La Sol Fa Mi Re Do Si La

5.—The scale serves to indicate the character and nature of a chant: for every melody is comprised within, and takes its distinctive character from some scale, or progressive series of notes, characterized by a fundamental note, (answering to what is called in modern language the key-note,) and by the position of the tones and semitones relatively to this fundamental note. Thus, for example, the well known Antiphon, Asperges me,<sup>1</sup> is a melody whose fundamental note, or, in the language of plain-chant, final,<sup>2</sup> is Sol, and in which the semitones occur between the third and fourth, and the sixth and seventh notes, counting upwards from that final. This Antiphon, is, then, written in the fifth scale given above, that of Sol.

<sup>2</sup> In Gregorian chant, the fundamental note of a melody is that on which it regularly terminates—whence the name final. The final, then, and not, in every case, the initial note, must be taken as the starting point of the scale. In the so-called plagal modes, however, the scale starts and ascends from the fourth below the final. (See chap. v, ¶¶ 5 and 6.)

6.—The scale also affords to the learner an excellent means of exercising the voice, and of familiarizing the ear with the progressions constantly used in singing. For this reason, he should make it his first care to sing the different scales properly, paying particular attention to fix in his mind where he must sing whole tones, and where semitones, as also to retain in his ear the sound he gave to the first note of the scale, so as to return, in descending, to the note from which he started in ascending. It is by all means advisable, for those whose musical ear is defective, to practise the scales, and other vocal exercises, at least in the beginning, with a piano-forte, organ, or other instrument, (supposing it to be well in tune,) that they may learn to make the tones and semitones with exactness,—a point on which everything depends in singing.

7.—Before proceeding to the consideration of the scale in its component parts, in other words, of the Intervals, we must devote a chapter to the explanation of certain signs which occur accidentally in Roman chant, affecting more or less the diatonic character of its melodies.

CHAPTER III.

ACCIDENTALS.

1.—In the Diatonic Scales, as we have considered them thus far, the semitones, it will be seen by examination, occur always and only between Mi and Fa, and Si and Do. We must now observe, that, under certain circumstances, the relations existing between the different notes of the Scale are, for the sake of euphony, altered—tones, for instance, being changed into semitones, and vice-versa. Thus, in some chants written, e. g., in the gamut of Re,<sup>1</sup> (or, in the language of plainchant, belonging to the first tone,<sup>2</sup>) it is customary at certain passages, to change the progressions (of whole tones) from La to Si, from Sol to La, and from Do to Re, into semitones, in order to temper the harshness which would result from singing whole tones. Similar changes are made, for the same reason, in melodies belonging to the other scales.

2.—These changes, as taking place only occasionally, and under certain circumstances, do not essentially affect the diatonic character of the melodies in which they occur. They are indicated by certain signs called accidentals, viz: the Flat (b),<sup>3</sup> the Sharp (#),<sup>4</sup> and the Natural (♮). The flat lowers by a semitone the pitch of the note before which it stands. The sharp raises the note to which it is prefixed, a semitone higher in pitch. The natural takes off the effect of a preceding flat or sharp, restoring to the note before which it stands its natural sound. The use of the accidentals is, according to the Roman practice, regulated as follows. After the rules for each accidental, we give a few examples by way of illustration.

POSITIONS OF THE FLAT.

3.—The flat is placed before Si only, and chiefly in the following four cases: First—To temper the harshness of the tritone, and false fifth, as will be explained in the next chapter.<sup>5</sup> (See Ex. 1.) Second—When the melody does not ascend, whether by conjunctive or by disjunctive degrees, above Si, with La before and after it—and this applies chiefly to the first, second, and sixth tones.

<sup>3</sup> It is generally expressed in the choral books, at least, in the more recent and correct editions; and where it is not expressed, it must be understood.

<sup>4</sup> This accidental is rarely, or never expressed in the choral books. Even the moderate use of it which we advocate, in conformity with the Roman practice, is strongly opposed by some.

(See Exs. 2 and 3.) Third—When the words are expressive of tenderness, or sadness—(as in Ex. 4.) Lastly—When the natural clefs are changed into accidental, as has been already explained.<sup>1</sup> In this case the flat is not considered as an accidental—it affects, with a single exception, every Si in the same piece of chant—in other words, every note placed in the same space with the flat, has, unless affected by the natural,<sup>2</sup> (the exception above alluded to,) a semitone immediately below it, and a whole tone immediately above it. Moreover, the degree in which the flat, used in this way, is placed, changes its name from Si into Fa. The denominations of the other notes are, of course, made to correspond—e. g., the degree below that in which the flat is placed, is called Mi, the next degree below, Re, and so on of the rest. So that the principal effect of the derivative clefs is to alter the nomenclature, and thereby indicate the difference between the essential, and the occasional, or accidental use of the flat on Si. The flat on Si is essential, when the nature of the chant demands it:<sup>3</sup> it is accidental, when the nature of the chant does not allow the Si to be depressed, except under peculiar circumstances—for instance, on account of the tritone, etc. In the former case the derivative clefs are used, bringing with them, as we have seen, the alteration of the names of the notes. In the latter case the natural clefs are used, and the names of the notes remain the same, excepting that the note Si, when accidentally affected by the flat, changes its name into Sa. Illustrations of the essential use of the flat may be seen in the Antiphons Alma Redemptoris,<sup>4</sup> and Regina Cali;<sup>5</sup> of its accidental use, in the following

POSITIONS OF THE SHARP.

4.—The sharp is placed, when the nature of the chant requires it, on Do, Fa, and Sol. It is employed: First—In middle and final cadences, when Do is followed by Re, as is often the case in the first and second tones; when Fa is followed by Sol, which is a common cadence of the eighth tone; and when Sol has La before and after it, as frequently happens in the first, third, and fourth tones. In the first case Do is sharpened, in the second case, Fa, and in the third case, Sol. (See Exs. 5 to 11, inclusively.) Second—To avoid the tritone<sup>1</sup>—(as in Exs. 12 and 13.) Third—To temper the false fifth<sup>2</sup>—(as in Ex. 14.) Fourth, and finally—When the sentiment of the text demands it, for the expression of greater sweetness or harshness.

POSITIONS OF THE NATURAL.

5.—The natural is always supposed, (the nature of the chant so requiring,) except in the cases where the flat or sharp is to be used, as mentioned in the two preceding ¶¶. It is expressed, at least, it ought to be expressed: First—Before every note which is to be restored to its original sound, after having been flatted or sharped immediately before—(as in Ex. 15.) Second—On the Fa of the two accidental clefs, when it is followed by Sol, in a cadence—(as in Exs. 16, 17, and 18.)

CHAPTER IV.

INTERVALS.

1.—An interval is the distance, as to pitch, from one note to another, or, the effect of two sounds compared together. The student must be careful to get a clear idea of this matter. Let him sing, for instance, a single note, as Mi, Fa, or Sol, etc., and he has as yet but a sound, and no interval. But let him sing two notes in succession, e. g., Mi, Fa, and a comparison between them, in point of pitch, will immediately occur to him—he will notice that the latter note is a certain degree higher than the former. He has, then, an interval, which in this case is nothing else than this certain degree by which Fa is higher than Mi. If, now, he sings successively Fa and Sol, he will find that the distance, as to pitch, is greater between these two notes than between Mi and Fa. The interval, then, between Fa and Sol, is a different one from that between Mi and Fa. Again, the student, in singing successively, e. g., Mi and Sol, will have an interval differing from either of the two preceding—and so on throughout the whole of the scale. An interval, then, is the relation existing, as to pitch, between two notes or sounds compared together. Thus, the relation existing, e. g., between Mi and Fa, is that of a semitone; in other words, the interval from Mi to Fa is a semitone—or, Fa is a semitone higher than Mi.

2 —The knowledge, theoretical and practical, of the intervals, is of the highest importance to the singer, forasmuch as they constitute the elements of the melodies of chant, every melody being nothing but a series of intervals, artificially and euphoniously arranged. We therefore bespeak the careful attention of the student to this matter, as briefly explained in the present chapter.

3.—The notes of the scale may be considered in two ways—as being situated either on the same degree, whether a line or a space, or on different degrees, conjunctive or disjunctive. In the former case we have the unison; in the latter, the different intervals, of which we shall now speak in order.

UNISON.

4.—Two or more notes situated on the same degree of the staff constitute the unison, which cannot, of course, be reckoned as an interval, there being between the notes composing it, no distance as to pitch, but all, on the contrary, having the same sound.

5.—The case may occur, however, in which two or more notes are found in the same space, or on the same line, yet not having the same sound. This would be effected by the use of the accidentals, as we shall now explain.

MINOR SEMITONE.

6.—The minor, or chromatic semitone, is an interval existing between two notes on the same degree, one of which is affected by one of the accidentals.<sup>1</sup> Thus:

7.—The minor semitone is not used in the ecclesiastical chant; hence this brief notice of it will suffice.

SECOND.

8.—The second, which is either minor or major, is an interval existing between every pair of notes placed on conjunctive degrees. The following are examples:

9.—The minor second, or, simply, the semitone, is either natural or artificial. The former occurs between Mi and Fa, and Si and Do. The latter results from the use of the accidentals, and occurs between La and Sa, Re and Do sharp, Sol and Fa sharp, and La and Sol sharp.

NATURAL.

ARTIFICIAL.

10.—The major second, or tone, is also either natural or artificial. The natural tone occurs between Do and Re, Re and Mi, Fa and Sol, Sol and La, and La and Si; the artificial tone between Mi and Fa sharp, Si and Do sharp, and Do and Sa.

NATURAL.

ARTIFICIAL.

11.—To change the semitone into the tone the sharp is used, in ascending, and in descending, the flat; and contrariwise, when the tone is to be changed into the semitone. Thus:

S. into T.    S. into T.    T. into S.    T. into S.

12.—Although every note of the scale may be altered by the use of the accidentals, so as to change tones into semitones, and vice-versa; yet we shall indicate only such alterations of this kind as occur in the ecclesiastical chant.

THIRD.

13.—This interval is either minor or major.

14.—The formation of the minor third consists in the passage from one note to a third higher, or a third lower, by means of a tone and a semitone, whether the tone come before the semitone, or after it. Thus, from Re to Mi is a tone, and from Mi to Fa is a semitone; Fa, then, is a minor third in respect of Re. Again: from Mi to Fa is a semitone, and from Fa to Sol is a tone; Sol is therefore a minor third with regard to Mi. In the latter instance the semitone comes first; in the former, the tone. This varying relative position of the tone and semitone is found in all the intervals, commencing with the minor third, and excepting the major third, the tritone, and the false fifth, and gives rise to their different species. The minor third, (with which we are at present particularly concerned,) has its first natural species, (in which the semitone is above the tone,) between Re and Fa, and La and Do; its second, (in which the semitone is below the tone,) between Mi and Sol, and Si and Re. Its first artificial species, (resulting from the use of the accidentals,) is found between Mi and Sol, when the intermediate Fa is sharped, and Sol and Sa; its second between Do and La, when the intermediate Si is flatted, Si and Sol sharp, La and Fa sharp, and Mi and Do sharp.

FIRST NATURAL SPECIES.

SECOND NATURAL SPECIES.

FIRST ARTIFICIAL SPECIES.

SECOND ARTIFICIAL SPECIES.

15.—The major third is formed likewise by a passage from one note to a third higher, or a third lower, but by means of two tones. From the fact that it admits no semitone, it has but one species. The natural major third is found between Do and Mi, Fa and La, Sol and Si: the artificial, between Re and Sa.

NATURAL.

ARTIFICIAL.

FOURTH.

16.—The fourth is either minor or major.

17.—The minor, or perfect fourth is formed by passing from one note to a fourth higher, or a fourth lower, by means of two tones and a semitone. This semitone may occur above the two tones, or between them, or below them; so that the perfect fourth has three natural species. The first is found between Do, and Fa above, and Sol, and Do above; the second between Re, and Sol above, and La, and Re above; the third, between Mi, and La above, and Si, and Mi above.

FIRST SPECIES.

SECOND SPECIES.

THIRD SPECIES.

18.—In continuing the formation of fourths, commencing from the different notes of the scale, it will be seen that if we commence from Fa, and ascend a fourth above, i. e. to Si, or, from Si, and descend to Fa, the fourth below, we have an interval including three whole tones in immediate succession. This is called the major fourth, or tritone. It is not used in plain-chant, (except perhaps, where the sense of the words requires the expression of harshness,) and must be changed into the perfect fourth, which is done by flattening the Si—sometimes, by sharpening the Fa, as in the following examples.<sup>1</sup>

19.—There are two other methods of tempering the harshness of the tritone, viz: to repeat one of the four notes, or to pause a little upon one of them. Thus:

REPETITION OF SOL.

REPETITION OF LA.

PAUSE ON SOL.

PAUSE ON LA.

FIFTH.

20.—This interval is either minor or major.

21.—The minor, or false fifth is formed by a passage from Fa to the Si below, or from Si to the Fa above, including two tones, with a semitone below, and a semitone above. Like the tritone, of which it may be considered the inversion, (for it occurs between the same notes, Si and Fa, though in a different way,) it has but one species, and generally speaking, must be tempered, by the flat, the sharp, repetitions, or pauses. Thus:

False Fifth.

Perfect Fifth.

Perfect Fifth.

REPETITIONS.

PAUSES.

22.—The major, or perfect fifth is formed by passing from one note to a fifth higher, or a fifth lower, so as to include three tones and a semitone. This semitone may have four varying positions; hence, the perfect fifth has as many different species, which are severally contained between Do, and Sol above, and Sol, and Re above, both of the first species; Re, and La above, and La, and Mi above, both of the second species; Mi, and Si above, third species; and Fa, and Do above, fourth species.

FIRST SPECIES.

SECOND SPECIES.

THIRD SPECIES.

FOURTH SPECIES.

SIXTH.

23.—The sixth is either minor or major. It is an interval of but rare occurrence in the melodies of plain-chant.

24.—The minor sixth is formed by a passage from one note to a sixth above, or a sixth below, including three tones and two semitones. It has three species, contained respectively between La, and Fa above, Si, and Sol above, and Mi, and Do above.

FIRST SPECIES.

SECOND SPECIES.

THIRD SPECIES.

25.—The major sixth is formed in the same way, except that it includes four tones and one semitone. It has likewise three different species, occurring severally between Do, and La above, Re, and Si above, and Fa, and Re above.

FIRST SPECIES.

SECOND SPECIES.

THIRD SPECIES.

SEVENTH.

26.—This interval is either minor or major, and like the sixth, it is used but rarely in plain-chant.

27.—The minor seventh is formed by passing from one note to a seventh above, or a seventh below, so as to include four tones and two semitones. Its different species are five in number, and they occur between Sol, and Fa above, La, and Sol above, Si, and La above, Re, and Do above, and Mi, and Re above.

FIRST SPECIES.

SECOND SPECIES.

THIRD SPECIES.

FOURTH SPECIES.

FIFTH SPECIES.

28.—The major seventh is formed in the same manner, excepting that it includes five tones and a semitone. It has two species—the first, contained between Do, and Si above; the second, between Fa, and Mi above.

FIRST SPECIES.

SECOND SPECIES.

OCTAVE.

29.—The octave, or diapason is formed by a passage from one note to the eighth above, or the eighth below, including five tones and two semitones. It has six different species, which are, in fact, nothing else but the six diatonic scales which we have given, in the chapter which treats of the Scale.<sup>1</sup>

30.—These six different species of the octave serve for the construction of the so-called ecclesiastical modes, or tones, of which we shall speak in the next chapter. By way of preparation for this matter, we will observe that the diapason, or octave, though containing in itself all the various intervals which we have hitherto considered, is generally divided, as into the two principal of its component parts, into its fourth and fifth—that is, it is regarded as being composed principally of a perfect fourth and perfect fifth, united in such a manner as to give an octave, or extent of eight notes, one of the extreme notes of the fifth being borrowed to aid in the formation of the fourth. Take the following for an example :

Fifth.                      Fifth.

In the above scale we have the perfect fifth, Do—Sol, to which is added the perfect fourth, Sol—Do. The fifth note (Sol) is marked 1, above, because it is at the same time the first note of the perfect fourth added to the fifth to complete an octave terminating in a note of the same name as that with which it began. A similar analysis of the other diatonic scales will show the like constitution by fourths and fifths in each of them. They will be found, however, to differ from each other in species, on account of the different species of their component fourths and fifths; for, no one of the six has the same fourth and fifth together as any one of the others. Thus, the second has the same kind of fifth as the sixth, but not the same kind of fourth; again, the second has the same kind of fourth as the fifth, but not the same kind of fifth—and so on of the others.

31.—Finally, it is to be observed, that the fundamental note of the octave is always the lowest note, not of its fourth, but of its fifth, which occupies the lower part of the scale, or octave, as we have hitherto considered it. The application of this principle will be seen in the next chapter, in which we shall become acquainted with a different arrangement of the fourth and fifth in the constitution of the octave.

32.—Having thus considered the construction of the different intervals used in plain-chant, we now subjoin a few vocal exercises upon them, the diligent practice of which cannot fail to give a facility of singing the intervals promptly and with exactness of intonation. The exercises should be sung at first slowly, in order to train the ear to the different intervals; afterwards, with a degree of rapidity proportionable to the progress made.

ACCIDENTALS.

The image displays five staves of musical notation, each containing a sequence of notes with various accidentals. The notes are represented by small squares on a five-line staff. The accidentals shown include natural signs (♮), flats (b), and sharps (♯). The notation is arranged in five horizontal staves, with the first staff starting with a sharp sign (♯) and the second staff starting with a flat sign (b). The notes are connected by stems, and some have diamond-shaped flags. The staves are separated by vertical bar lines, indicating measures of music.

This section contains several staves of musical notation that are significantly faded and less legible than the top section. The notation appears to be similar to the examples above, with notes and stems on a five-line staff, but the details are difficult to discern due to the low contrast.

CHAPTER V.

TONES, OR MODES.

1.—We use the word tone in this place as signifying, not an interval,<sup>1</sup> such as occurs, e. g., between Re and Mi, Fa and Sol, etc., but an aggregation of many melodies having the same character, from the fact of their being contained, more or less, within one and the same scale, or compass of eight notes,<sup>2</sup> and having certain cadences, or progressions in common, and a common so-called final, and dominant. The final of a melody is analogous to what is called in modern music the tonic, or key-note. Every tone has a regular and invariable final for all the melodies it comprises:<sup>3</sup> thus, all those of the first tone end on Re; those of the eighth tone, on Sol—and so on. The dominant is the prevailing note, and the reciting-note in the psalm-melody, of the tone.

2.—The tones, or, as they are also called, modes, are, according to the present Roman usage, eight in number. They were modelled after the four modes principally in use before the time of S. Gregory the Great, and which were severally called Dorian, Phrygian, Lydian, and Mixolydian, according to the different countries to which they were peculiar. To these modes S. Gregory (as is generally believed,) added four others, the Hypo-Dorian, Hypo-Phrygian, Hypo-Lydian, Hypo-Mixolydian, which are also called plagal, i. e., dependent, secondary, as having been admitted after, and made in imitation of, the four originally in use, which are called authentic, or principal.

3.—In order to explain the construction of the tones, or modes of plain-chant, we must premise that each of them, whether authentic or plagal, is composed, as of its essential elements, of a fundamental note, or final, having a perfect fifth above it, and a perfect fourth in addition to that fifth, making in all an octave, or extent of eight notes, as we have explained in the preceding chapter.<sup>4</sup> With regard to these fourths and fifths it is to be observed, that, besides the fact of their differing<sup>5</sup> in species in the different tones, (and thereby producing a different kind of octave for each,) their relative position also varies, i. e., in some tones the fourth is above the fifth, in others

<sup>3</sup> The conclusions of some psalm-melodies form an exception to the general rule. Thus, in the first tone the first conclusion terminates on Fa, the second on Sol, the fourth on La, and so on. (See Intonations of the Psalms, Part II, ch. i, § ii, || i.) There are a very few other exceptions, e. g., the Antiphon Nos qui vivimus, (see ¶ 16 of the present chapter,) the Kyrie of Doubles, etc.

it is below it, in which latter case the fifth, differently from the first case, occupies the upper part of the octave, or scale.

4.—The eight tones, then, are severally constructed as follows: The first tone (authentic) has for its scale that of Re. Its final is Re, having above it a perfect fifth of the second species, (Re, Mi, Fa, Sol, La,) to which is added above (commencing with the upper note of the fifth,) a perfect fourth of the second species, (La, Si, Do, Re,) making the octave (from the lower to the upper Re) within which the melodies of the first tone are more or less comprised. Finally, the dominant of this tone is La.

SCALE OF THE FIRST TONE. (DORIAN, AUTHENTIC.)

5.—The second tone is the plagal of the first, which it resembles, in having the same scale as to its essential elements. For, it has the same final (Re) as its authentic, consequently the same species of fifth above the final. It has, too, the same fourth, only taken from above the fifth, and set down an octave lower in pitch, making the compass, or scale of the second tone to extend from La, a fourth below the final, to La, a fifth above it. This is illustrated by the following figure, from which, too, it will be seen that the second tone further differs from the first in having Fa as its dominant.

SCALE OF THE SECOND TONE. (HYPO-DORIAN, PLAGAL.)

6.—The mode of construction given for the first tone answers, mutatis mutandis, for the other authentic tones (the third, fifth, and seventh)—that is, every authentic tone has its fourth above its fifth, of what species soever each may be. Similarly, the remaining plagal tones (the fourth, sixth, and eighth) are respectively constructed like the second tone, relatively to the authentic from which they are severally derived. In other words, every plagal tone has the same final, and the same species of fourth and fifth as its authentic; or, as we might say in the language of modern music, it is in the same key as its authentic. Only, in consequence of the transposition of the fourth, as explained in the preceding paragraph, the compass of plagal melodies is different from that of authentic melodies—not, indeed, numerically, but in point of pitch; for, the former do not ascend, as authentic melodies may do, to the octave above the final, and, on the other hand, they may descend, which authentic melodies do not, to the fourth below the final; so that every plagal final is in the middle of the scale, instead of being at the bottom of it, as is the case with authentic finals. Moreover, in every pair of tones standing to each other in the relation of authentic and plagal, the dominants are different.

7.—We proceed to illustrate the construction and nature of the remaining tones by the following figures, which will be easily understood after what has been said.

SCALE OF THE EIGHTH TONE. (HYPO-MIXOLYDIAN, PLAGAL OF THE SEVENTH.)

8.—The ordinary compass of each mode, or tone, is that of eight notes, as is seen by the above figures. But we must observe, first—that a melody may (in fact, the greater part of the melodies of plain-chant do,) fall short of this full extent; in which case the tone to which it belongs is called imperfect; otherwise, it is called perfect. An authentic tone, then, is perfect, when the melody reaches the octave above its final; otherwise it is imperfect. Similarly a plagal tone is perfect, when the melody ascends to the fifth or sixth above, and descends to the fourth below, its final; and it is imperfect, when the melody does not descend to the fourth below the final. Examples of the above are the following: perfect authentic, the Antiphon Asperges me;<sup>1</sup> imperfect authentic, the Antiphon Nos qui vivimus;<sup>2</sup> perfect plagal, the Antiphon Adorna thalamum;<sup>3</sup> imperfect plagal, the Antiphon Lumen ad revelationem,<sup>4</sup> etc.

9.—It is to be observed, secondly—that a melody often exceeds the octave, or regular compass of the tone to which it belongs. This excess may be that of one, or more notes, and it may occur either in the upper, or lower part, or in both the upper and lower parts, of the scale. Thus, e. g., in the first tone, one melody may descend to Do, a tone below its final, another to La, a fourth below its final, whilst a third may ascend to Mi, or even Fa, above the octave of the final—and so on of other tones.<sup>5</sup> In such case of a melody exceeding its scale, the tone is said to be either mixed, or commixed, according as the melody, by such excess, participates in the character of a collateral, or relative tone,<sup>6</sup> or of a tone not related to it.<sup>7</sup> Thus, it not unfrequently happens, that an authentic melody descends to the third or fourth below its final, so as to have somewhat of the character of its relative plagal tone; or, vice-versa, that a plagal melody ascends to the seventh or eighth above its final, thereby partaking of the character of its relative authentic. In the former case, (an instance of which is the Salve Regina,<sup>8</sup> at the words Et Jesum.) we have an authentic tone mixed (with its plagal); in the latter, (exemplified in the Responsory Libera me,<sup>9</sup> at the Burial of the Dead,) a plagal tone mixed

<sup>6</sup> Two tones are collateral, or relative to each other, when both have the same final—in other words, when one is an authentic tone, and the other its plagal. Thus, the first and second tones are collateral, so the third and fourth, etc.

<sup>7</sup> Non-relation exists between a tone and every other not having the same final.

(with its authentic).<sup>1</sup> Again, we sometimes find in a melody belonging to a certain tone, the peculiarities of some other tone not related to it. This is called the commixture of tones, e. g., of the first with the third, the fourth with the second, the eighth with the sixth, etc.

10.—Finally, a tone is regular or irregular, according to its final. The regular finals, as will be seen from the figures given above<sup>2</sup> in illustration of the scales of the eight tones, are four in number: Re, for the first and second tones; Mi, for the third and fourth; Fa, for the fifth and sixth; and Sol, for the seventh and eighth. But we occasionally find chants with finals differing from any of the above, and such are called irregular. This is explained as follows: Besides the principal ancient modes, i. e., the Dorian, Phrygian, Lydian, and Mixolydian, two others were in vogue in some parts, the Æolian, and the Ionian, the former having for its final, La, the latter Do. Each of these tones was divided into authentic and plagal, according as the fourth of its scale was above the fifth, or below it, as has been already explained.

11.—The following are the scales of these four additional tones. It will be seen that they are similar in construction to the other tones, being comprised within an octave, composed of a perfect fifth and perfect fourth. They are, then, so far, regular; but irregular, in having finals severally differing from any of those of the so-called eight tones.

SCALE OF THE ANCIENT ELEVENTH TONE. (IONIAN, AUTHENTIC.)

SCALE OF THE ANCIENT TWELFTH TONE. (HYPOIONIAN, PLAGAL OF THE ELEVENTH.)

12.—An example of the Æolian mode is the melody for the Psalm In exitu, sung at Vespers of the Sunday Office.<sup>1</sup>

13.—The Hypo-Æolian tone is exemplified in such Graduals<sup>2</sup> as terminate in La, (the Gradual Requiem, of the Mass for the Dead, is an instance,) and in the Antiphon Hæc dies,<sup>3</sup> sung during Easter-week.

14.—The following is an example of the authentic Ionian mode. It is taken from the Graduale Romanum edited under Paul V.

SANCTUS of the Mass for Semi-Doubles.

15.—The Hypo-Ionian mode is illustrated by the Antiphon Ave Regina, which, although at present generally written in the scale of the sixth regular tone,<sup>4</sup> was originally composed in the twelfth mode, then in use. Thus:

16.—Finally, a solitary instance of a chant with the final, Re, one note above the Do clef, is the Antiphon Nos qui vivimus,<sup>5</sup> belonging to the Psalm In exitu, already mentioned.

<sup>5</sup> It has long been a subject of dispute, to what tone this Antiphon belongs. The most probable opinion, however, is, that it is of the seventh tone, as it has the fifth, Sol—Re, surmounted by the fourth, Re—Sol, the upper So' being contained in the scale, though not in the melody. In some choral books this Antiphon is set with the Fa clef, changing its final So on Re to Sol.

Nos qui ví - vi-mus be-ne-dí-ci-mus Dó-mi-no.

17.—The greater part of the irregular tones have lost their irregularity, so to speak, their finals having been changed, by means of transposition. To transpose a tone is to remove it from its proper seat, in other words, to take it out of its original scale or octave, and place it in another of the same species, thereby changing its pitch, but not its distinctive character. It will be seen that no two of the twelve tones have a scale precisely the same, i. e., composed of the same kind of fourth and fifth, conjunctively taken. There exists, however, an analogy between some of them. Thus, the first tone is analogous to the ninth: both have the same species of fifth, which, in both, occupies the lower part of the scale. Again, the second and tenth tones resemble each other in having the same species of fifth, above the fourth; the fifth and eleventh, in having the same species of fourth, above the fifth; and the sixth and twelfth, in having the same species of fourth, below the fifth. But either the fourths, or the fifths, differ in each pair of analogous tones. Now, in the course of time, as grave authors assure us, the flat came, by an abuse, to be employed on the Si of the first, second, fifth, and sixth tones, not only to avoid the tritone, but as if essential to the nature of these several tones. The consequence was, that the difference of fourth, or fifth, as the case might be, no longer existed, and the first, second, fifth, and sixth tones became respectively identical in construction with the ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth. Thus, in the first and ninth tones the fourths became identical in species, the fifths being so already; and the same took place in the case of the second and tenth tones. Again, in the fifth and eleventh tones the fifths became identical in species, the fourths being so already; and the same may be said of the sixth and eleventh tones. Hence, only eight tones were counted, the ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth being considered as severally the same with the first, second, fifth, and sixth, only differing in pitch, i. e., transposed a fifth higher. This is illustrated by the following figures. The guide, at the end of No. 1 of a pair of parallel modes, indicates the note on which mode No. 2 of the same pair commences, thereby showing the difference between the two in point of pitch. Observe the identity of fourth and fifth in each pair of parallel modes.

18.—The reduction of the twelve tones to the eight now in use, was, then, effected by means of transposition, which is easily explained, after what we have just seen. Chants of the ninth tone were transposed into the scale of the first tone; those of the tenth, (with some few exceptions,) into that of the second; those of the eleventh, into that of the fifth; lastly, those of the twelfth, into that of the sixth; and in each of these cases the note Si had to be flatted, (as is seen in every No. 1 of the above four figures,) in order that the new scale might be identical with the original.

<sup>3</sup> The reduction of the tones is condemned by many distinguished church-musicians, who maintain that the Æolian, Hypo-Æolian, Ionian, and Hypo-Ionian modes should be by all means retained, on the ground that, though severally analo-

20.—We conclude this chapter by giving, at a glance, the finals and dominants of the eight tones, together with the peculiar expression, or character, usually ascribed to each tone, in exemplification of which we would refer the student to the various chants contained in the Roman Gradual, Antiphonal, or Vesperal.

- First Tone*.....Final, Re; dominant, La. Character, grave, majestic, sometimes even stirring and joyous.
- Second Tone*.....Final, Re; dominant, Fa. Character, (generally,) mournful, sad.
- Third Tone*.....Final, Mi; dominant, Do. Character, impetuous, austere.
- Fourth Tone*.....Final, Mi; dominant, La. Character, bland, sweet, sometimes plaintive.
- Fifth Tone*.....Final, Fa; dominant, Do. Character, bold, gladdening, triumphant.
- Sixth Tone*.....Final, Fa; dominant, La. Character, amiable, devout.
- Seventh Tone*....Final, Sol; dominant, Re. Character, rude, menacing; some call it angelic.
- Eighth Tone*.....Final, Sol; dominant, Do. Character, sweet, melodious.

The above description of the characters of the various tones will be found to hold good in most cases; though there are, on the other hand, frequent instances of a chant expressing a sentiment different from that assigned to the tone to which it belongs. We would recommend, as highly interesting, the study of the different tones, illustrated in the Antiphons, Graduals, Hymns, and other pieces of chant contained in the Roman choral books. Each tone will be found to preserve a certain uniformity of character in all its various melodies, arising principally from the constant occurrence of the same, or similar musical phrases, cadences, etc.—a uniformity which, without creating weariness, serves to impress the peculiar character of the tone upon the minds of the hearers; so that one who is gifted with good musical capacities is enabled, in a short time, to tell to what mode, or tone, a given chant belongs, by simply hearing it sung.<sup>1</sup> gous to the Dorian, Hypo-Dorian, Lydian, and Hypo-Lydian tones, they are not identical with them, (as we have shown above,) the use of the flat on the Si of the latter, except in certain cases, being a comparatively modern innovation, and an abuse. On the other hand, it is contended, that this use of the flat is inherent in the character of the tones in question, especially in that of the fifth and sixth; and in fact, it is the Roman practice to flat the Si almost continually, in these two tones. For the rest, the mere transposition of tones, provided it be into scales identical with the original scales, is not only lawful, but even sometimes necessary, and a thing of constant occurrence.

OF PSALMODY.

CHAPTER I.

INTONATION OF THE PSALMS, IN GENERAL.

1.—The regular number of intonations, or melodies, of the psalms, is eight; but a ninth is added for the psalm In exitu, with which it should be used exclusively.<sup>1</sup>

2.—We must distinguish in every complete psalm-melody its four constituent parts, viz: the commencement, or first degree;<sup>2</sup> the dominant, or reciting note; the cadence of the middle, called the mediation; lastly, the conclusion, or final cadence.

3.—The psalm-melodies are divided into two kinds—those for the psalm after the Introit, at Mass; and those for the psalms in the Divine Office, e. g. at Matins, Vespers, etc.

§ I.—INTONATIONS OF THE PSALMS AT THE INTROIT.

4.—The intonations for the psalms after the Introit are contained in the Gradual, to which the student is referred. We have deemed it expedient, however, to give the Doxology, as sung to each of these melodies, in full, forasmuch as in most Graduals only the initial word Gloria is represented with notes, after the psalm of the Introit, the adaptation of the remaining words being left to the skill of the singer. To preclude, therefore, the possibility of mistakes, we reprint the following from the esteemed Roman work, Istituzioni di Canto Fermo. The note placed at the beginning, immediately after the clef, indicates the final of the tone.

§ II.—INTONATIONS OF THE PSALMS OF THE OFFICE.

5.—The intonations of the psalms of the Divine Office are either festival, or ferial, and are used accordingly. The festival intonation is composed of the four parts mentioned above, viz. the commencement, dominant, mediation, and conclusion. The ferial intonation is composed of but three of these parts, as it lacks the first, i. e., the commencement. We now proceed to give these various psalm-melodies, or, as they are called, the Gregorian tones, both festival and ferial, from the Directorium Chori of Guidetti. The note placed immediately after the clef, at the beginning of each tone, indicates the final of the tone, being the last note of the antiphon preceding the psalm. We have represented the dominant, or reciting-note, in each of the tones, by a triple breve, in order to avoid the useless multiplication of notes.<sup>1</sup> The figures placed after the abbreviations Med. (mediation), and Concl. (conclusion), denote the number of syllables which they respectively require, as we shall explain hereafter.

ever the Office is accompanied with the organ, however, the antiphons after the psalms may be supplied<sup>1</sup> by that instrument. On Semi-Doubles, the antiphon is given out as before, and after a word or two of it, the first verse<sup>2</sup> of the psalm is intoned by the chanters, as explained in the next paragraph. The antiphon, if it be not supplied by the organ, is sung entire after the psalm.

10.—The first verse of the psalm is, on Doubles and Semi-Doubles, intoned by two chanters, on all the four parts of the psalm-melody, just as we have given the verse Dixit Dominus in each of the tones. The remaining verses are sung by the choir, the side opposite the celebrant commencing on the second verse, the other side taking the next verse, and so on, alternately throughout the whole psalm. Observe, however, that the second and remaining verses of each psalm are sung like the verse Donec ponam,<sup>3</sup> i. e. on only three parts of the psalm-melody, the choir commencing in each case on the dominant, not on the first degree, or commencement. The conclusion<sup>4</sup> of the psalm-melody being variable in some of the tones, the choir must be careful to listen how the chanters end the first verse, so as to sing the same conclusion in the remaining verses.

11.—In the case of the first and fourth tones, it is the practice of the most celebrated choirs of Rome to omit, in singing the second and remaining verses of a psalm, the first Sol of the mediation,<sup>5</sup> as in the following examples:

FIRST TONE.	FOURTH TONE.
 Dom. Med. 4. 	 Dom. Med. 2.
Donec ponam ini - mí - cos tu - os, etc.	Donec ponam inimicos tu - os, etc.

Another occasional variation of the mediation in some of the tones will be noticed hereafter.<sup>6</sup>

12.—The Ceremoniale Episcoporum recommends that the Doxology after each psalm should be chanted more solemnly than the psalm itself—soleniiori vocis modulatione;—which may be done in the following manner: On Sundays, and ordinary feasts, it should be sung more slowly than the verses of the psalm; and on feasts of the first and second class, in addition to this greater slowness, the full intonation might be used, as sung at the end of the Canticles.<sup>7</sup>

13.—On feasts of the first and second class the psalms are chanted somewhat more slowly than on ordinary days, when they are sung rather rapidly. Care must be taken, however, always to articulate the words distinctly, avoiding the extremes of drawing and precipitation.

<sup>2</sup> On some Semi-Doubles the commencement of the antiphon is the same as that of the psalm. In such cases, they who intone the first verse of the psalm must not repeat the words sung by the chanter, but continue the verse from those words.

<sup>4</sup> The conclusion depends on the antiphon of each psalm. Hence, when the antiphons are sung, the chanters must end their intonation with that conclusion which is indicated in the Antiphonary, supposing the tone to have various endings.

<sup>5</sup> In the case of the first tone this rule applies, of course, only when the mediation given in the first place is sung in preference to that in the second place. See table of intonations, || i, § ii, Part II.

14.—A very short pause should be made before the *, and the |, whenever they occur in the psalms.

15.—Special attention should be paid to accent syllables marked thus ', and to avoid the common fault of hurrying over a long or accented penultima, before a pause, in order to rest on the final syllable, e. g. in the words sanctorum, tuorum, etc.

16.—On each side of the choir all should take up their verse of a psalm immediately at the conclusion of the preceding one,—begin, and end at the same moment together. When the psalms are accompanied with the organ, however, it will be necessary, in some of the tones, to make a short pause between the verses, to enable the organist to connect them together by appropriate modulations.<sup>1</sup>

17.—The director of the choir will observe, that according to the best authorities the psalms should be sung on a uniform pitch, the sound of La, Sa, or even (on great solemnities) Do, being taken for the dominant of all the tones.<sup>2</sup> He should also be careful to suppress at once every attempt at harmonizing<sup>3</sup> the tones, on the part of the members of the choir. The Roman chant should be sung in unison, and the by no means easy task of harmonizing it should be left to the organist.

§ IV.—ADAPTATION OF THE WORDS OF THE PSALMS TO THE VARIOUS INTONATIONS.

18.—The manner of adapting the text of the psalms to the respective mediations and conclusions of the various intonations, is a point of great importance in psalmody, and one, at the same time, concerning which there are some differences of opinion. Most manuals of plain-chant, however, give the following general rules:—

19.—First.—In all dactylic words, i. e. those of more than two syllables, having the penult short, and the antepenult accented, e. g. Dominus, Spiritui, timéntibus, misericórdia, etc., the penult does not count, in numbering the syllables, but is considered as one syllable with that before

<sup>1</sup> The Ceremoniale Episcoporum prescribes that the psalms should be chanted without the accompaniment of the organ—organum pulsari solet in fine cujuslibet psalmi. The contrary custom, however, says Father Pernarelli, in his Istituzioni di Canto Fermo, has become general, “in virtue of a benign interpretation of the passage cited; forasmuch as a moderate and grave accompaniment does not drown or confuse the sacred words, but, on the contrary, helps to support and bring out the voices of the singers,” etc. Should it be preferred to follow the prescription of the Ceremoniale Episcoporum, the organist must be careful to take up at the end of each psalm that tone in which the singers left off, (even supposing them to have fallen from the original pitch,) modulating, by appropriate harmonies, into the key in which the next psalm is to be sung.

<sup>2</sup> This must be regulated more or less according to the voices of the singers. Yet experience shows that there is, generally speaking, less danger of what is called flat singing, when the psalms are chanted on a moderately high pitch. At the same time, any thing like screaming, whether on the part of the whole choir, or of individual members of it, should be carefully avoided.

<sup>3</sup> We trust we may be pardoned for applying the word harmony to the absurd combinations in question.

or after it. Thus, the regular number of syllables for the mediation, e. g. of the first tone, is four: yet we sing Domino meo, five syllables, to this mediation, according to the rule, the penultima mi of Domino not being counted.<sup>1</sup>

20.—The Directorium Chori furnishes us with examples of exceptions to the above rule. Thus, in the formula of the fourth tone, as reproduced in our manual<sup>2</sup> from that work, we find, in the mediation, the penult mi of the dactylic word Domino, reckoned as a separate syllable, and having a note peculiar to itself—a note differing from that before and after it,—which is not the case with the mediations of the other tones. Again, in the Directorium Chori we find examples of similar exceptions in the case of the eighth tone. In that work the ninety-fourth psalm is represented in full, with notes, to the eighth tone, with the first conclusion. The note Si, of the conclusion, is given sometimes to an accented syllable, sometimes to a final, and, in the case of a dactylic word, to the penultima. Thus:

8th Tone.	Concl.	8th Tone	Concl.
- - - - salu - tá - ri no - stro.		- - - - món-ti - um i - psí - us sunt.

In other choral books may be found analogous examples in the case of the second conclusion of the same tone. Thus:

8th Tone.	Concl.
- - - - - á - ni - mam me - am.

21.—Second.—If the syllable immediately before the *, at the mediations of the second, fourth, fifth, and eighth tones, be a monosyllabic word, or a syllable with the acute accent, or the final syllable of a Hebrew word, the melody ascends upon such syllable one note above the dominant, and the last note of the mediation is omitted, as in the following examples:

FIFTH AND EIGHTH TONES.

22.—Third.—Sometimes a verse of a psalm will be found not to have a sufficient number of syllables before the * to sing the dominant and mediation, or after it, to sing the dominant and conclusion. In such cases the dominant, and sometimes the first note of the conclusion, is omitted, and the words (or syllables) are sung to the notes of the mediation or conclusion alone, as the case may be. The following are examples:

23.—Fourth.—If a note at the commencement of a mediation or conclusion ascend above the dominant, a final syllable should not be sung to such note, but the penult should be taken instead, or, if this be short, the antepenult. According to this rule, then, the mediations of the first, third, seventh, and ninth tones, and the conclusions of the fifth and seventh tones, will sometimes require more than the regular number of syllables. In certain cases, it will be necessary even to omit the dominant altogether.

Should there be two syllables, both short, before such monosyllabic word, they are to be considered as one, and treated in the same manner. Thus:

CHAPTER II.

INTONATIONS OF THE CANTICLES.

1.—The canticles Benedictus and Magnificat are always sung on all the four parts of intonation throughout, each verse being chanted like the first, or rather, in the case of the Magnificat, as the first verse would be sung if it were not too short to admit the full intonation in any of the tones.

2.—The canticles are always chanted more slowly and solemnly, and in less of a reciting, and more of a singing, tone of voice than the psalms. The pauses, too, must be carefully observed.

3.—The first verse of the Magnificat (with which we are here chiefly concerned,) is intoned, like that of a psalm, by the chanters. If an organ accompany Vespers, the second verse may be supplied<sup>1</sup> by an interlude; the third verse is sung by both sides of the choir united, with a moderate accompaniment of the organ; the fourth verse is treated like the second, the fifth like the third, and so on to the end.<sup>2</sup> The Antiphon which was sung before the canticle may, at the end, as in the case of the psalms, be supplied by a short symphony.<sup>3</sup> But if Vespers are not accompanied with the organ, the second and remaining verses of the Magnificat are chanted, like those of a psalm, by the two choirs alternately, and the Antiphon is sung after as well as before it.

Magni - fi - cat * ánima	me - a Dó - minum.	2. ánima	me - a Dó - minum. 2.

<sup>2</sup> On great festivals, this canticle, after the first verse has been intoned by the chanters, may be sung in alternate verses by the select and general choir,—in harmony by the former, (which also takes up the second verse,) in unison by the latter: or, all the verses, the first excepted, may be sung by the select choir exclusively; and if an organ accompany Vespers, only the alternate verses need be sung, the rest may be supplied by the organ.

<sup>3</sup> The Antiphon should not be repeated or supplied at the end till the incensation of the Altar, etc., is finished. The organist should therefore regulate his interludes accordingly, so that the canticle may terminate together with the incensation.

<sup>4</sup> We give the Canticle in the case of each tone having many conclusions, with the first one throughout. If one of the other conclusions is to be sung, it will be easy to adapt it to the termination of the verse, in the same manner in which we have adapted the words mea Dominum to the different conclusions.

4.—Monosyllables, syllables with the acute accent, and interrogation points, occurring in the course or at the end of the Little Chapter, are respectively sung as follows :

Ecce virgo concipiet, etc. . . . et vocabitur nomen ejus Em-manuel. Butyrum, etc.

Quis credidit auditui nostro? et brachium Domini | cui revolutum est? Et ascendet, etc.

§ IV.—HYMN.

The Little Chapter is followed by the Hymn for the day. The first line is intoned by the celebrant, if this be practicable; otherwise, by one of the chanters. The whole Hymn is then sung by both sides of the choir in alternate stanzas, those on the Gospel side beginning first. If an organ accompany Vespers, the Hymn may be sung by the two choirs united, in unison, with a moderate accompaniment of the organ, or by a select choir, in harmony; and instead of the second, fourth, sixth, in other words, every alternate stanza after the first, being sung, the organist may play a short interlude. Observe, however, 1st—that, in clerical choirs, the stanzas not sung must be recited in a distinct voice (generally on the key-note) by one of the chanters,—a rule which applies also to Antiphons at the end of the Psalms and Canticles, and to the alternate verses of the latter, when not sung;<sup>1</sup> whence the technical expressions, to repeat with the organ, to supply by the organ, applied to interludes and symphonics at the Hymns, Canticles, Antiphons, Responses, and other chants. Observe 2dly, that the first and last stanzas of a Hymn, and the Doxology at the Canticles, (the verse Sicut erat, etc., included,) must always be sung by the choir, not supplied by the organ. The same rule applies to those verses of Hymns, etc., at which it is prescribed to kneel, e. g., Te ergo quæsumus; O Crux ave spes unica, etc.

§ V.—VERSICLES.

5.—These are intoned immediately after the Hymn by two chanters, the choir making the Response. The manner of singing them varies according to the difference of rite.

|| IV.

V. Benedícta tu | in mu-li - é-ribus.
R. Et benedíctus | fructus ven-tris tu - i.

7.—The following very common falsification of the above intonation ought to be avoided:

EXAMPLE.

V. Panem de cælo | præstitisti e - is. ----- e - is.
R. Omne delectamentum | in se habén - tem. ---- habéntem.

8.—If the last syllable of a Versicle be a monosyllabic word, or have the acute accent, it is sung as follows:

V. Spíritus Sanctus | supervéniet in te. e - - e - - - - .

V. Fiat misericórdia tua Dómine su - per nos.
R. Quemádmódum sperávimus in te.

V. Procedámus in pa - co.

R. In nómine Christi. A - men.

9.—Versicles with Alleluia are sung, on Doubles, as follows:

V. Ascéndit Deus in jubilatíone. Allelúia. a - - a - - - - .
R. Et Dóminus in voce tubæ. Allelúia. a - - a - - - - .

10.—The following is an example of the intonation of the Versicle at the Vespers of the Dead:

V. Audivi vocem de cælo | di - céntem mihi.
R. Beáti mórtui | qui in Dómino mo - ri - untur.

§ VI.—MAGNIFICAT.

(See Chapter II, Part II.)

§ VII.—PRAYER.

11.—The intonation of the prayer is either festival or ferial. The former is used on Doubles and Semi-Doubles at Matins, Mass and Vespers; the latter on Simples and Ferial days, and for the Dead, as also for such prayers as occur out of Matins, Mass and Vespers, even on solemn days, c. g., at the other Canonical Hours, at the Blessing of Candles on the feast of the Purification, of Palms on Palm-Sunday, etc.

FESTIVAL INTONATION.

12.—In the festival intonation the prayer is sung on one note, Do, with the exception of two variations, Do, Si, La, Do, Do, and Do, Si. The former of these variations is called the principal point, the latter the semi-point. The principal point is used to terminate the clause which forms the first part of the prayer, and which is correctly marked with a colon. Before it a slight pause and respiration must be made, and the note Si is sung to the fourth-last syllable before the colon, or, if the second-last syllable be unaccented, to the fifth-last, so that the ascent from La to Do be always made on an accented syllable. The semi-point is made in the second clause, at the comma, or semi-colon, and consists of two syllables on Do, Si, sometimes three, the last two syllables of dactylic words being sung to Si, as if one syllable. If, however, the prayer be too short to allow of two variations, as, for example, on the feast of S. Callistus, Pope and Martyr, or of S. Saturninus, Martyr, the semi-point is omitted, and the principal point alone is used.

13.—When both points are used, the principal point is always sung first in order, then the semi-point. This is to be understood of the prayer itself; for, in the conclusion the inverse order is observed, the semi-point being sung first. Each point is sung but once in the prayer, how many soever the clauses; so that the principal point and semi-point, or, in a prayer requiring it, the principal point alone, having been sung once, the remainder of the prayer up to the conclusion is intoned upon Do, without any variation. A prolongation of the voice is made upon the fourth, fifth, or sixth last syllable of the prayer and conclusion, according as best suits the accent. When the conclusion, in the festival intonation, is Per Dominum, or Per eundem, the semi-point is sung upon tuum, and the principal point upon Sancti Deus. When the conclusion is Qui tecum, or Qui vivis, the principal point alone is sung, at Sancti Deus, the semi-point being omitted. Observe, that the words Per omnia sæcula sæculorum, terminating the conclusion, are intoned, like those terminating the prayer, upon the note, Do, without variation.

EXAMPLE OF FESTIVAL INTONATION.

FERIAL INTONATION.

14.—In the ferial intonation the prayer, with its conclusion, is sung on one note, Do, throughout, without any variation. In place of the principal point and semi-point a prolongation of the voice and respiration are made. This is the proper manner of reciting the prayer on ferial days, Simples, and in Masses for the Dead.

15.—There is another ferial intonation differing in no respect from that just mentioned, except that it admits an inflection from Do to La, at the end of the prayer and conclusion. It is used for the prayer after the Antiphon of the B. V. Mary, at the end of the Office, for the prayer after the Sprinkling of Holy Water on Sundays, and for the prayer after the Response, Libera me, at the Burial of the Dead; also for the prayers after the Litanies, and for those before and after the Blessing of Candles, of Ashes, and of Palms. The first two prayers, however, at the Blessing of Palms are sung with the festival intonation; and the prayers Deus a quo, and Libera nos, on Good Friday, as also all the prayers before Mass on Holy Saturday, including those for the Benediction of the Font, are recited on the ferial intonation of the Mass, mentioned in the preceding paragraph. The eighteen prayers following the Passion, in the Mass of Good Friday, have their own peculiar intonation, for which see Appendix No. 3. (Holy Week.)

<sup>1</sup> Dominus vobiscum, except at the Preface, is always sung on one note. We would call the attention of those who direct choirs to the true method, as given in this work, of intoning the Responses throughout Vespers, Mass, etc., as they are almost universally falsified, in practice.

16.—When two or more prayers are sung in succession with the above intonation, the inflexion from Do to La is made at the end of the last prayer only, and in the conclusion.

§ VIII.—COMMEMORATIONS, ETC.

17.—The Prayer being finished, Commemorations, if there be any, are made, by singing the appropriate Antiphons,<sup>1</sup> Versicles and Responses, and Prayers. The Versicle and Response are chanted as at ¶ 6, § v. The Prayer is intoned in the same way as the Prayer before the Commemorations.

18.—Then, the same pitch being maintained, the following is sung:

Celebrant. 	Choir.
Dóminus vobíscum.	R. Et cum spírítu tuo.

19.—The following Versicle and Response are then chanted, according to the rite.

The Gospel is sung on the note Do, with the three following variations. At a period, the voice descends to La on the fourth, fifth, or sixth last syllable,<sup>1</sup> returning immediately to Do, and carrying with it the syllables which remain. The interrogation point is sung as in the Epistle.<sup>2</sup> At the close, the voice descends to La on the fourth, fifth, or sixth last syllable, which is sung slowly to three notes, La, Si, Do, the remaining syllables being sung on Do.

CHAPTER IV.
OF THE EXECUTION OF ROMAN CHANT.

It is a thing which needs no proof, that the devotional effect of ecclesiastical music depends essentially on the manner in which it is executed. We give, therefore, in this concluding chapter of our Manual, a summary of the chief points to be observed under this head, condensed from the Istituzioni di Canto Fermo, Berti's Regole di Canto Gregoriano, the Ceremoniale Episcoporum, etc.

§ I.—OF THE SINGERS.

1.—The first thing necessary in a singer is a good voice, a point of so great importance, that it is far better for such as are not gifted by nature in this regard, to abstain from singing in the church, contenting themselves with singing in their hearts to God, and offering up to Him the sacrifice of their desire to join their voices with those of the others. Such persons should be persuaded that the addition of their bad voices can only produce disgust in the hearers, and destroy the effect of singing, which, without them, would be impressive and devotional.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, however, they should labor to improve their voice, if possible, by the aid of a competent master, and not cease from their endeavors till they discover their defect to be a radical and incurable one.<sup>2</sup>

2.—A point of great importance for singers, not only that they may preserve a good voice, but also that they may not injure their health, is, that they should not force their voice beyond its natural strength, as so many do, whose chanting might be called shouting, or screaming, rather than singing. It is plain, that such singers rob the ecclesiastical chant of that beauty and modesty peculiar to it, and give any thing but edification to the hearers.<sup>3</sup>

3.—Care must be taken, in singing, to pronounce clearly, distinctly, and intelligibly, the words placed under the notes; to observe the so-called tonic accent of the syllables (indicated, in

<sup>2</sup> This point is particularly referable to ecclesiastics, whose functions require them to sing in the church: such persons "ought not," says Father Pernarelli, "to deem themselves dispensed from endeavoring to improve their voice, if it be a bad one, so as to learn at least by the ear, as the saying is, what appertains to the exercise of the priestly ministry. The error into which not a few ecclesiastics fall, is, that despairing of becoming good singers, they neglect to learn even that little of chant which is indispensable to their holy profession. They should therefore take all pains, and use all diligence to acquire this knowledge."

our Manual, by this mark (‘), in all Latin words of more than two syllables); to avoid trills, and what is called sliding,<sup>1</sup> in passing from one note to another,—without, however, on the other hand, striking a note with so much force and violence as to cause disgust, especially in the beginning of a chant.

4.—Pauses, or respirations must be made in the course of a piece; for the ecclesiastical chant is called in Latin cantus firmus, as proceeding with gravity, and majesty. It would therefore be a great abuse to execute it with precipitation, and without regard to the pauses required by the sense of the words.

5.—The pauses occurring in a chant, besides helping to bring out the sense of the words, serve also for respiration and repose for the singer. He should remember therefore, 1st—to give to the first note of every intonation the time of two notes; 2d—to take breath for the space of one note, at every bar placed on the staff;<sup>2</sup> 3d—to hold with double value the note constituting the final cadence of a chant; and at the close of every chant, to sing the penultimate, or, if this be short, the antepenultimate note, at least half a note longer; 4th—to pause for the space of one note, after singing an Antiphon or Introit, before commencing the Psalm which follows.

6.—Singers should be mindful to make the respirations together, and never to divide a word by taking breath in the middle of it, especially if it should have but few notes; for, should it have many, the respiration must be made at the bar. As a general thing, the proper place to take breath is at the comma, the semicolon, the colon, and above all, the period. When two or more are singing together, they should proceed in perfect union in regard both to the notes and the words; and the stronger voices must not cover up those that are weaker, but should rather adapt themselves to them in such a manner as to produce the effect of voices perfectly equal. It is a point of great importance, that singers listen to each other, and especially to the leader, so as to ensure as entire a unity in singing as is possible. Finally, he who is appointed to repeat, as it is called, the Antiphons, or the alternate verses of the Kyrie, Gloria, Sequence, Sanctus, Agnus, etc., should recite the words clearly and distinctly, on the dominant of the tone, if he has a high voice; otherwise, or if the tone be too high, on the final, or some other note according with the organ,—though, as a general thing, the dominant is to be preferred.

7.—The time, or movement, in which the Antiphons, Psalms, Hymns, Kyrie, Gloria, Creed, etc., are sung, is regulated according to the rite of the feast celebrated; for these chants are, on solemn days, executed with more gravity, and more frequent pauses, than on ordinary feasts.<sup>3</sup> The same thing applies to the seasons of Advent and Lent, when the organ is not used, at which time the chanting, especially in the case of the Gradual, Tract, Offertory, and Postcommunion, should be somewhat slower, in order to fill up the interstices in the Divine Service, which at other times

<sup>2</sup> It is hardly necessary to observe that this does not apply to the bars found on the staff in the Intonations of the Psalms (p. 46, et seq.) and in those of the Magnificat, (p. 58, et seq.) which serve only to divide off the mediations and conclusions, and not for respiration. The pauses for respiration indicated by the short bars found among the Latin text, might perhaps be made a trifle shorter than those signified by the bars on the staff.

<sup>3</sup> “Quo dies erit solemnior, eo majori cum gravitate et dignitate in canendo vox sustentanda, et moderanda est, tam ab Hebdomadario, et Cantoribus, quam a Celebrantibus, et aliis assistentibus, in omnibus, quæ eis canenda occurrunt.”—Directorium Chori, De modo utendi Directorio.

are filled up by the sound of the organ. Generally speaking the Introit is taken slow, but at the repetition (when this is not supplied by the organ,) it may be sung somewhat more quickly, and with sonorousness of voice, and majesty. The Allluia, with its verses, is sung in a cheerful and spirited movement. The Tract and Gradual require gravity, and sadness of expression. The Offertory is chanted in a grave and majestic manner. The Postcommunion may be taken in a cheerful movement, rather than otherwise. The Antiphons are intoned with sweetness and amiability, and slowly. The Responsories ought to be executed with a lively and brilliant tone of voice, being intended to stir up the drowsy, and excite them to the worship and praise of God. Finally, the Canticles are taken more slowly than the Psalms, and the Te Deum, Pange lingua or Tantum ergo at Benediction, etc., require a certain grave and majestic movement suitable to the subjects of those sublime hymns.

8.—In chanting, exterior modesty and composure of body should not be neglected. The singers should not move their head, their eyes, their mouth, their hands, their feet, and their whole body in an unbecoming manner, but remain immovable, preserving such an external deportment as is calculated to give edification. This is especially to be observed when the choir are exposed to the sight of all; when the ridiculous contortions and gestures to which some singers accustom themselves, might have the effect of disturbing the gravity of the congregation.

9.—A point not to be forgotten, as being of the utmost importance, is that in every choir there should be a director, leader, or chief singer, (of whose duties we shall speak in §3 of this chapter,) whom the singers should follow and obey in all things, not singing in advance of him, not accelerating the time observed by him, and not commencing to sing till he has pre-intoned the chant, at least by some few notes. This precept of pre-intoning, or giving the tone, has always been inculcated by the best masters,<sup>1</sup> as a point of great importance, the neglect of which is apt to cause disorder and confusion; and it ought especially to be observed in singing plain-chant, in which there is no strict rhythm, a defect which can be supplied only by the direction of a skilful leader.

10.—Finally, in other practical points relating to the Holy Sacrifice of Mass, Vespers, Matins, Processions, etc., singers should consult and follow the books consecrated by the usage of the most ancient and exemplary churches of Rome, viz; the Directorium Chori,<sup>2</sup> the Ceremoniale Episcoporum, the Pontificale Romanum, the Missale Romanum, etc., and not the customs, or rather the corruptions, of some, who sing more by usage than according to art, of whom Venerable Bede says, in one of his works on Music:<sup>3</sup>

Bestia, non cantor, qui non canit arte, sed usu.

In fact, a standard of some kind there must be, in the matter of which we are treating; for the chant of the Divine Service is not an arbitrary thing, but has, like the rites of the Church, its fixed forms and rubrics, laid down chiefly in the books mentioned above. And the simple fact that these books are consecrated by Roman usage, is a sufficient argument for their universal adoption.

<sup>1</sup> Thus, for instance, S. Benedict, in his Rule, gives the following precept to his monks: "Quando in choro ad psallendum stant, consona voce et corde psallant; et illi incipiant versum, qui præ cæteris utilius possunt, ut ad primam vel secundam syllabam cæteri convenire possint juveneculi pronuntiantes voce."

§ II.—OF THE ORGANIST.

11.—The organ has been laudably introduced into the sacred temples to add, by the accompaniment of the ecclesiastical chant, to the dignity, beauty, and variety of the Divine worship—an end for which no other instrument is so admirably adapted. He who wishes, then, to serve the Church in this way, must learn to exercise his noble art according to the prescriptions and in the spirit of the Church, in the manner which we shall briefly explain in the present section.

12.—It is to be lamented that so few organists are to be found who are skilful in the accompaniment of plain-chant. To perform this office properly, it is necessary to be a good harmonist, to have a knowledge of the ecclesiastical modes, and a familiarity with the grand and peculiarly religious modulations to be found in the works of a Palestrina, a Pergolesi, a Händel, a Bach, a Mendelssohn, and other masters of the same stamp. The organist who lacks these qualifications, however skilful in other respects, will serve to impede, rather than enhance the effect of the ecclesiastical chant, by his incongruous accompaniments. It is well worth the while, therefore, for those who desire to become, not merely good organists, but also good church organists, to make a study of the tones of plain-chant, and of the works of masters like those we have named above—a study which will open to them a great variety of beautiful and sublime harmonies, and enable them to touch the most religious of all musical instruments in a religious manner.<sup>1</sup>

13. The prescriptions and spirit of the Church, referred to above, in regard to the accompaniments of the organ, are expressed in her ceremonial books, and illustrated by the practice of the most exemplary churches. We give a compendium of them in the following instructions concerning the time and manner of playing the organ in accompanying the Divine service, to which we invite the careful attention of all concerned.

WHEN THE ORGAN MUST BE PLAYED.

14.—The organ is used on all Sundays throughout the year, on all Feasts of obligation, and on other days of some solemnity, at Mass and at Vespers. The Sundays of Advent, however, (exclusive of the third, called Gaudete,<sup>2</sup>) and of Lent, (exclusive of the fourth, called Lætare,<sup>2</sup>) and the office called de Tempore, form exceptions.

15.—The organ is silent at Masses and Offices of the Dead, according to the prescription of the Ceremoniale Episcoporum, though the contrary custom prevails in some churches. This is permitted by a decree of the Sacred Congregation of Rites,<sup>3</sup> but a subdued and grave manner of playing must be observed.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> We hope to be able, if our Manual should prove acceptable to the public, to publish a little work for organists, on the subject of the Ecclesiastical Tones, etc., with reference to the accompaniment of plain-chant.

<sup>2</sup> "In Dominica 3 Adventus, et 4 Quadragesima pulsanda sunt organa in Missis et utrisque Vesperis." (Decr. S. C. R. apud Gardel, 16 Sept. 1673.) Another decree of the same Congregation (2 Sept., 1741,) says: "Organa non silent, quando ministri altaris, diaconus scilicet et subdiaconus utuntur in Missa Dalmatica et Tunicella, licet color sit violaceus." From these words, concludes Father Pernarelli, it is plain that the organ ought to be used on the Feast of the Holy Innocents, notwithstanding the Alleluia and the Gloria in Excelsis are omitted on that day, because the Tunicella is used at Mass, although of violet color.

<sup>4</sup> A limitation to which the attention of organists is hereby respectfully invited.

16.—The organ is not played on Feasts occurring in Advent and Lent ; excepting some, as, that of S. Matthias the Apostle, of S. Thomas Aquinas, of S. Gregory the Great, of S. Joseph, of S. Joachim, of the Annunciation, of the Immaculate Conception, and others, provided they are celebrated with solemnity ; excepting also the Mass of Maundy-Thursday, at the Kyrie elcison and the Gloria in excelsis only, and on Holy Saturday, commencing at the Gloria in excelsis, and continuing throughout the rest of the service.

17.—The organ should be played, says the Ceremoniale, when the Bishop enters the church either to celebrate solemnly, or to assist at solemn Mass celebrated by another ; as also when, having celebrated or assisted, he leaves the church. The same is to be observed when an Apostolic Legate, a Cardinal, an Archbishop, or another Bishop whom the Diocesan Bishop wishes to honor, enters the church—the organist continuing to play until the Divine service is to be commenced.

18.—Moreover, the use of the organ is permitted at solemn Ordinations, and, according to the Roman usage, at the Hymn Veni Creator ; as also, at the Consecration of a Bishop, at the same Hymn, and at the Psalm Ecce quam bonum, alternating, if it is sung in this way ; and on other similar occasions. In general, the use of the organ is prescribed whenever there is occasion to celebrate solemnly and joyfully pro re gravi.

19.—At Matins, celebrated with solemnity on the principal Feasts, and at Vespers, the organ is played from the beginning, but at the other Canonical Hours it is usually silent. If, however, it should be the custom in some places to use the organ at the Canonical Hours, or at some of them, as, for instance, at Tierce, especially when the Bishop, being about to celebrate, puts on the sacred vestments, such custom may be retained. In fact, in certain churches the organ is played at Lauds, at the Hymns of Tierce and Complin, at the Canticle Nunc dimittis, and at the Antiphon of the B. V. Mary after Complin, provided it be sung,—for otherwise the organ should be silent.

20.—When the organ supplies an Antiphon, or the alternate verses of a Hymn or Canticle, the words thus omitted in singing must be pronounced in an intelligible voice by some one of the choir ; and it would be advisable that some chanter should sing these words in union with the organ. It is also a fixed rule, applicable to Vespers, Matins, and Mass, that the first verse of a Hymn or Canticle, as also certain verses at which it is prescribed to kneel, e. g. Te ergo quæsumus ; O Crucis spes unica ; O salutaris Hostia ; Tantum ergo ; Et incarnatus est, etc., are to be intelligibly sung by the choir, not supplied by the organ, even though the verse immediately preceding was sung by the choir. The same rule applies to the last stanzas of Hymns, and to the verse Gloria Patri, etc., on account of the reverence due to the Most Holy Trinity, as some authors explain it.

21.—During the time of Divine service the organist ought to be ever on the look-out for the precise moment to play or to cease, in order that, on the one hand, there may be no interstices in the sacred functions, and that, on the other hand, he may not unduly detain those who are performing them, by causing them to wait for him to discontinue.<sup>1</sup>

22.—Whenever the organ is played immediately after the choir, it should take up, and in a certain way, imitate the tone left by the singers, and not that in which they commenced, especially if,

<sup>1</sup> In connection with this subject, we cannot but recommend the modern plan of so arranging the key-board of the organ that the organist, when playing, looks toward the altar. The advantages of this plan outweigh the trifling additional expense, and ought to lead to its universal adoption.

after singing a long time without the accompaniment of the organ, they should have fallen from the original pitch, as frequently happens.<sup>1</sup> This is necessary, in order to preserve that union between the choir and the organ, the absence of which is so shocking to every ear having the least perception of the difference between cacophony and euphony.

23.—Forasmuch as the organ at one time precedes the singing of the choir, and at another accompanies and follows it; the organist should precede in the tone or key to be taken up by the singers, as, e. g., at the Kyrie, Gloria, Sanctus, Agnus, etc. He should follow the choir, as is done at the alternate verses of the Kyrie, Gloria, Sanctus, etc., and of the Hymns and Canticles, in the key in which the singers leave off, modulating into that in which the next verse is to be sung; for there will be found a variety of key in some chants, of which the Gloria in excelsis, the Ambrosian Te Deum, etc., are instances.

24.—To come to particulars,—the organ is played at Vespers, from the sounding of the sacristy-bell till the celebrant commences Deus in adjutorium,<sup>2</sup> etc. The organ accompanies the choir in the Response, modulates into the proper key for the first Antiphon, and then ceases. The first Antiphon having been sung, (without accompaniment,) the chanters intone the first verse of the Psalms, the organist accompanying it and the remaining verses in a grave and harmonious manner.<sup>3</sup> The Psalms, with its Doxology, being finished, the organ continues to sound a little longer, during which time one of the singers repeats the words of the Antiphon sung at the beginning. The organ, having modulated into the proper key for the next Antiphon, ceases, and does not resume till the chanters commence the first verse of the second Psalms, when it is played as before at the first Psalms. The same is to be said of the three Psalms which follow, at the end of the last of which the organ leaves the tone for the Little Chapter, and then ceases. At the Hymn the organ is played as directed at § IV, p. 71; it gives the tone, if needful, for the Versicle, sung by two chanters, and, after the Response, takes up the tone left by the singers, modulates into that in which the Antiphon at Magnificat is to be sung, and is then silent until the Antiphon is finished, when it resumes, accompanying the first verse of the Canticle, and continuing as directed at ¶ 3, p. 58. After supplying the Antiphon at the end of the Canticle, the organ might give out a suitable tone for the Dominus vobiscum, and Prayer. Should there be one or more Commemorations, to be sung in a different key, the organ might take up the note on which the choir sang Amen, and modulate into the key of the commemorative Antiphon; it might also accompany the choir in the Response to the Versicle, ceasing immediately after. Benedicamus and Fidelium animæ being finished, the organ resumes and continues to play till the clergy have returned to the sacristy.

25.—At Matins, the organ is played, as at Vespers, until the celebrant intones Dominic, labia mea aperies, and Deus in adjutorium, etc., the Responses to which it may accompany, if desirable. It then ceases, and the Invitatory and Psalms Venite follow, sung by two chanters and the choir, alternately. At the Hymn and the Psalms the organ is played as at Vespers.<sup>1</sup> The three Psalms of the first Nocturn having been sung, two chanters intone the Versicle, and the choir sing the Response, in union with the organ. At the end of the first Lesson the organ sounds until one of the singers has finished reciting in a clear voice the words of the Response; the Versicle is then sung by two chanters, after which the Response is repeated as before. What has just been said of the first Lesson answers for the second and third; and what has been said of the Psalms and Lessons of the first Nocturn, applies to those of the two remaining ones. The ninth Lesson having been recited, the celebrant intones the Hymn Te Deum laudamus, which the choir continue, alternating with and accompanied by the organ. This finished, the organ ceases, and the celebrant sings Dominus vobiscum, and the Prayer. The chanters sing slowly Benedicamus Domino, accompanied by the organ, the choir answering Deo gratias. After Fidelium anime the organ resumes, and continues to sound till the beginning of High Mass.

<sup>1</sup> So too, at the Gloria in excelsis and Credo in the Mass, and on other similar occasions, the organist should take up the tone of the celebrant, and modulate into that in which the choir ought to continue.

<sup>2</sup> The organist should prelude in a key suitable to the celebrant's voice, and the latter should abide by that key in singing Deus, in adjutorium, etc. The ear is not unfrequently shocked by hearing the organ playing in one key and the celebrant taking up another.

26.—When the sacred ministers have arrived at the foot of the altar, and are about to begin Mass, the organ ceases, and the chief singer commences the Introit, which is continued by the choir. Two<sup>2</sup> chanters sing the first half of the Psalm-verse, and the choir the other half; the Gloria Patri, etc., is chanted in the same way. The organ then sounds, and during this time the words of the Introit are recited. (If the key of the Kyrie is different from that of the Introit, the organist should modulate into the former.) The Kyrie having been pre-intoned, the choir sing it, the organist accompanying them; he continues to play, by way of interlude, after the first Kyrie, and during this time the second Kyrie is recited; the choir sing the third Kyrie, after which, during the interlude of the organ, Christe eleison is recited,—and so on, alternately, to the end. After the last Kyrie, the organ continues to sound a little longer, and then ceases. When the celebrant has intoned the Gloria, the organist takes up his tone, and modulates into the proper key for the choir. Meanwhile, a chanter recites Et in terra, etc.; the choir sing the next verse, after which the organ continues whilst the fourth verse is recited,—and so on, alternating, to the end. After the Gloria the organ is silent, and resumes after the Epistle, sounding until the singing of the Gospel. Should there be a Sequence to be sung, the organ accompanies and supplies the verses alternately, as at the Gloria. When the celebrant has intoned the Credo, the organ takes up his tone, as usual, and gives the key to the choir. If it be preferred to accompany the Credo with the organ, it may be done, by virtue of universal custom. The Credo and Dominus vobiscum having been sung, the organ is played<sup>3</sup> until the Preface, during which it is silent. The organist takes up the note on which the Preface was ended, and modulates into the key for the Sanctus,<sup>4</sup> which he accompanies as at the Kyrie, continuing to play until the celebrant is ready to sing the Pater noster. After Pax Domini, etc., the organ resumes, modulating, if necessary, into the proper key for the Agnus, which it accompanies, as at the Sanctus, and continues to sound until the choir are

<sup>4</sup> According to the Ceremoniale Episcoporum, (Lib. 2, cap. 8,) the choir should cease singing after the first Horanna, etc., and then, and not before, the Elevation takes place, during which the organ is played. After the Elevation, the choir continue Benedictus, etc.

ready to sing the Postcommunion, during which it is silent.<sup>1</sup> When Itc missa est, or Benedicamus Domino has been sung, the organ takes up the tone, and accompanies the choir in the Response, if it is sung; otherwise, the organist plays a short symphony, whilst the choir recite the words Deo gratias in a low tone of voice, and on the last note of Itc missa est, or Benedicamus Domino. The organ is silent during the reading of the last Gospel, after which it resumes, and continues till the clergy have returned to the sacristy.

HOW THE ORGAN MUST BE PLAYED.

27.—In this second division of the present section we shall consider, 1st—the style of organ-playing, in general, and 2d—the manner of accompanying plain-chant. In regard to the first point, there is room for reform in some quarters. The organ is often entrusted to persons distinguished more for their great execution than for a truly religious style of playing, and these not unfrequently reproduce in the church the exciting and sometimes frivolous airs of the ball-room or theatre, to the great distraction of all devout worshippers. This is an abuse against which the Church has ever protested, and which it is her earnest wish to see abolished. The Council of Trent (Sess. 22, Dec. 1, post Sess.) calls on the Bishops to banish improper music from the sacred temples: “Ab Ecclesiis vero musicas eas, quibus sive organo, sive cantu lascivum aut impurum aliquid miscetur . . . . . arceant.” The Council of Rome, held in the year 1725, (Tit. 15, c. 6.) ordains the same: “Sub pœnis . . . . . cohibeant Episcopi musicæ magistros, organistas, et cantores, aliosque quoscunque a quibusvis in Ecclesia indecori cantus modulationibus, ne fidelium magis videantur auribus prurire, quam pios in Deum affectus excitare.” To the same effect, too, is the following, from the Ceremoniale Episcoporum: (L. 1, c. 28.) “Cavendum est, ne sonus organi sit lascivus aut impurus, et ne cum eo proferantur cantus, qui ad officium, quod agitur, non spectent, nedum profani, aut ludieri; ne alia instrumenta musicalia, præter ipsum organum, addantur.” We might multiply similar passages from the decrees of Councils, the Encyclicals of Popes, etc., but the citations we have given are sufficient to show the mind of the Church on this point, which is, in a few words, that the manner of playing the organ at the time of the sacred functions should be grave and dignified, so as to excite devotion; and consequently, that the custom of performing, at such time, lively marches, operatic airs, dance music, etc., and in general, a light and frivolous manner of playing, is an abuse, and one which those who preside over churches ought to take pains to abolish. Clergymen about to engage an organist are advised to look out for one who is a good harmonist, and well versed in the art of modulation, even though he be of limited execution; such a one, they may rest assured, will serve the Church better than one whose chief recommendation is his agility of finger, and facility of producing startling effects. Far better, when a church-organist is in question, is a moderate degree of execution, with a good knowledge of ecclesiastical harmony, than a brilliant execution, without that knowledge, or with but a moderate degree of it; the latter might suffice for a good pianist, but for a good organist, a thorough knowledge of harmony is indispensable, nay, the principal requisite.

<sup>1</sup> Should the Postcommunion be recited, instead of being sung, according to the custom of some of the churches of Rome, the organ continues sounding till the celebrant sings Dominus vobiscum.

28.—Supposing, then, that our organist touches his instrument in the grand, dignified, religious style proper to it, let us say a few words concerning the accompaniment of plain-chant, in particular, and first, concerning the quality and quantity of sound to be employed in the different parts of the Divine service. Before Vespers, and Mass, the organist should play with full organ, and in a cheerful, though not frivolous, movement, (especially when the Bishop assists or celebrates,) in order to signify the joy and readiness of mind with which we should assemble to pay our homage to the Lord. A little before the actual commencement of the sacred function, he should pass over to the becoming quality of sound, adapting his manner of playing, his harmonies, and choice of stops, to the sentiments corresponding to the function, or expressed in the text of the chants about to be sung. But let us speak a little more in particular of this matter.

29.—The Invitatory should be introduced with a sweet and pleasing sound, as invitations are properly given with sweetness and affability. The Hymn, which contains the praises of God, requires a festive and cheerful manner of playing. The Psalms, which likewise expresses sentiments of praise, as also of prayer, is accompanied, generally, with a grave, yet joyful sound; but, according to the Ceremoniale, the organ is played only at the end of each Psalm, i. e., whilst the Antiphon is being recited, after the Doxology.<sup>1</sup>

30.—At Mass, the organist should play, after the verse Gloria Patri, etc., in a lively, cheerful movement, passing skilfully over to that subdued and grave quality of sound proper for the Kyrie. At the Gloria in excelsis he should likewise play in a festive, cheerful manner, up to the verse Adoramus, when he should pass over to a grave, devout style; the latter part of the Hymn, from Quoniam, etc., may be accompanied like the first part. The Gradual is followed by the organ in a sad and mournful tone, indicative of the sorrows of the penance preached by S. John the Baptist. Or, if Alleluia is sung, instead of the Gradual, the organ is sounded in an exulting, jubilant tone; and when Alleluia is joined to the Gradual, the organist might play first in a mournful, then in a jubilant tone.

31.—At the Sequence, the sound of the organ should be cheerful and exulting. The Sequences sung with the organ are three, viz: Victimæ Paschali laudes, for Easter Sunday, and during the octave; Veni sancte Spiritus, for Whit-Sunday, and during the octave; and Lauda Sion, for Corpus Christi, and during the octave. After Dominus vobiscum, etc., sung immediately before the Offertory, the organ is played with spirit, combined with gravity, to express the offering of good works made to the Lord, which are the fruits of the preaching of the Gospel.

32.—At the Sanctus, the organ responds with an exceedingly grave and majestic sound, as is suitable to this sublime hymn of praise; at the termination of which, it continues to sound with soft stops, and a slow, devotional movement, in order to indicate in some way the approaching sacrifice. At the time of the Elevation, it should be played, says the Ceremoniale, with all possible melodiousness and gravity; continuing, partly in a sad tone, to signify the bitter pains our Lord suffered for us on the cross,—partly in a tender and consolatory tone, to express the peace He procured for the world by the shedding of His precious blood. After the Pater noster the organ does not resume, but continues silent, to signify that our Lord, after His seven last words on the cross, ceased to live this mortal life.

33.—The organ is sounded after Pax Domini, etc., gravely and devoutly, as a preparation for the Agnus Dei, which being finished, it continues in the same way till the Post-Communion, when it ceases. Should the Post-Communion be simply recited, however, or, should there be time remaining after it, the organ should follow in a cheerful, animated movement, to express the sentiments of thankfulness of the faithful, who are refreshed by the Eucharistic banquet, of which the Church wishes that they should partake with joy and gladness—In voce exultationis resonant epulantes in mensa Domini.<sup>1</sup> After the Deacon has sung Ite Missa est, the organist resumes, in the key in which the former left off, with the full organ, and in an exulting and triumphant tone, signifying our Lord's joyful Resurrection and glorious Ascension, as also the victorious preaching of the Gospel, and the triumph of the new law of grace throughout the whole world.

34.—To what has been said concerning the quality and quantity of sound proper for the accompaniment of plain-chant, we would add two suggestions. First, the organist should remember that his instrument, when played in union with the choir, is intended but for an accompaniment. He should therefore be careful to choose his stops with judgment, avoiding the too frequent use of mixtures, powerful reed-stops, etc., and in general, too great power of tone; otherwise, he will either drown the voices of the choir, or compel the singers to force their voices in order to make themselves heard. In the second place, the different interludes, symphonies, etc., to be played in the course of the service, (we refer especially to certain parts of it, e. g. the Elevation at Mass, etc.,) should be of a nature to excite devotion rather than curiosity in the worshippers. This end may be attained by avoiding well-known or too striking melodies, and, in general, such a style of playing as is calculated to take up one's whole attention, by holding the ear, as it were, enchained, as often happens to musical persons, in spite of themselves.

35.—Finally, a matter of the greatest importance to our organist, is, to know what kind of harmonies he must use in the accompaniment of plain-chant, as also, how to assign the proper pitch, or key, for each piece of chant. With regard to the first point, our humble opinion, confirmed by the judgment of distinguished church-musicians, is, that the harmonisation proper for the Gregorian chant is a fusion of the diatonic and chromatic genres, though with a predominance of the former, especially when the organist is actually accompanying the chants of the choir.<sup>2</sup> The Gregorian is, as we have said before, a diatonic chant, hence it is properly accompanied chiefly by diatonic harmonies; yet these may be tempered with harmonies peculiar to the chromatic genus, in order to avoid stiffness, and occasional harmonisation which would be so repulsive to the ear as to render no accompaniment vastly preferable.<sup>3</sup>

36.—Should the organist desire to play in union with the chants of the choir, it will be absolutely necessary for him, as we have said before, to be thoroughly acquainted with the Ecclesiastical Tones, their relations to each other, and to the modes of modern music, the character, cadences, final, dominant, etc., peculiar to each. Thus, for instance, the first tone is analogous to the key of D minor. The same is to be said of its relative tone, the second, with this difference, that whereas the melodies of the former are comprised more or less within its final and the octave above it, those of the latter range from the fourth below to the fifth above the final, which is the same (D) in both,—a circumstance which suggests to the organist the frequent necessity of transposition, in the case of the second tone. Again, the third tone ranges (apart from transposition, of which we shall speak presently,) from E to E, more or less; its third is minor, but its having a minor second (F natural,) destroys all farther analogy with the modern key of E minor. Yet the harmony proper for the final note (E) of the third tone, is not the chord of C, but of E, for the most part, major, according to the practice of the best masters. We might go on in the same way to consider the other tones, their peculiarities, and how far they are analogous to the modes of modern music, but the limits of the present work do not allow it. We would recommend to organists the study of this matter as interesting, and so essential, that he who cannot apply to it, had better abandon all pretensions to accompany the ecclesiastical chant, which, in our opinion, suffers from two extremes, i. e., if it loses sweetness, and is rendered stiff, by a rigid and exclusive adherence to a diatonic harmonization, it becomes, on the other hand, absurd and unmeaning, when accompanied by an organist who is ignorant of the tonality in which it is composed.

<sup>2</sup> In the preludes, symphonies, and interludes by which the organist connects the various chants of the Divine service, more liberty might be allowed; but even here, it would be well, at least immediately before introducing a given piece of chant, to play in such a manner as to imitate the diatonic character of the tone to which it belongs.

<sup>3</sup> We hope to be able to treat more at length upon this subject hereafter.

37.—In the second place, the organist ought to be skilful in assigning the proper pitch for the different chants sung by the choir. This is a matter which depends more or less on the extent of notes in a given piece of chant, the quality of the singers' voices,<sup>1</sup> and the degree of solemnity of the feast celebrated, a somewhat higher pitch being taken on solemn days, as has already been observed. The following figures will, it is hoped, be found serviceable under this head. They suggest at once to the organist the scales, in modern notation, of the different Ecclesiastical Tones. Thus, in the case of the first tone, the scale given in the first place, in Gregorian notation, is to be rendered on the organ by one of the scales beneath it, according to circumstances. If a given chant is of the first tone, perfect,<sup>2</sup> it may be played in D minor, or, on solemn days, in E minor. A chant of the same tone, if imperfect,<sup>3</sup> may be taken in E minor, or even, on solemn days, except, perhaps, when it is followed by a Psalm, in F minor; if perfect, mixed with its plagal,<sup>4</sup> in E minor. The same explanation, mutatis mutandis, will answer for the figures illustrative of the other tones, it being understood that, in each case, the pitch is to be taken higher or lower, according to the circumstances mentioned at the beginning of this paragraph. The letter F, placed over a note, shows such note to be the final, or key-note of the scale. The notes occasionally affected by accidentals, according to the Roman practice, are indicated by the proper accidentals being placed over them. Other points will be taken notice of in the next paragraph. Finally, we would remark, that the fact of a Gregorian clef appearing, in a chant in a choral-book, on a line different from that on which the same clef is found in the proper scale, among the following figures, ought not to make any difficulty in finding the pitch by means of them. For instance, in chants of the seventh tone we sometimes find the clef (of Do) on the third line, whereas in the seventh of the following figures it is placed on the second line.<sup>5</sup> Nay, in some tones, not only will the clef be found on one line in the book, and on another in the figure, but we shall occasionally find a difference in the clefs themselves. Thus, a chant, e. g., of the first tone sometimes has the clef of Do, (on the upper line of the staff,) instead of that of Fa, as in the first of the following figures; and a chant of the eighth tone, the Fa clef, instead of the Do clef, as in the eighth figure. All that is to be done in such cases is to find, by means of the clef, as placed in the book, the names of the notes whose proper sound we wish to get, then see where the same notes are placed on the upper staff in the figure,—and casting the eye in a straight line downward we shall find a suitable pitch, higher or lower at choice, in modern notation.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> We venture this explanation at the risk of its being thought gratuitous; but experience has taught us that one can scarcely be too clear in unravelling the mysteries which so many find in the square notation.

<sup>2</sup> It will be seen that in the signature, (though not in the scale itself,) we represent the sixth of the scale as minor, although, in the first tone, Si is flatted, in other words, the sixth becomes minor, only occasionally. We represent the sixth as minor, in order to make the signature conformable to the designation of the key, and thereby spare the organist the embarrassment he might feel in seeing a discrepancy between the two. We have, for the same reason, adopted the same method in the case of some of the other tones, giving a signature conformable to the designation of the key, and affecting certain notes with accidentals, in the course of the scale, to make them correspond with the square notes above them.

NOTE.—The organist little familiar with plain chant might think he saw a contradiction in the scales of the above figure. It might seem to him inconsistent to assign to the key of E minor the scale of B minor, to the key of F minor the scale of C minor, etc. But it must not be forgotten that it is peculiar to the plagal<sup>1</sup> tones, (of which the second tone is one,) to have the key-note about in the middle of the scale. Hence, the first note of any of the above scales, or of those of any plagal tone, does not represent the key-note, but only the extent to which the melodies of the tone descend below it, (which extent is regularly that of a fourth, as we have already seen,) the key-note being, in each case, the fourth note of the scale, instead of the first, as in the authentic tones.

The figure shows four musical staves, each representing a different key for the Third Tone. The top staff is a plain scale with notes Mi Fa Sol La Si Do Re Mi Re Do Si La Sol Fa Mi, starting and ending on F. Below it are four staves, each with a key signature and a cadence for the phrase "Di-xit Dominus".

- Key, C<sup>sharp</sup> minor. Dominant, A. The scale has two sharps (F# and C#). The cadence is a half note F# followed by a whole note A.
- Key, D minor. Dominant, B<sup>b</sup>. The scale has one flat (F). The cadence is a half note F followed by a whole note B<sup>b</sup>.
- Key, D<sup>sharp</sup> minor. Dominant, B. The scale has three sharps (F#, C#, G#). The cadence is a half note F# followed by a whole note B.
- Key, E minor. The scale has one sharp (F#). The cadence is a half note F# followed by a whole note E.

<sup>1</sup> In the case of the present tone, as also in that of the fourth (see Fig. 4,) we make an exception to the rule mentioned in Note 2, page 108, of giving to the scale a signature conformable to the designation of the key. We denominate the key, in the third tone, and its collateral, or plagal, the fourth, as usual, according to the final, or fundamental note of the scale, viz: in the third tone, C sharp, D, D sharp, etc., and in the fourth, E, F, F sharp, etc. Moreover, these keys are properly called minor, in the present case, inasmuch as each of them has a minor third. But the second in each of them is also minor, a peculiarity of the two tones in question which gives them a marked, distinctive character, and renders them entirely dissimilar to our modern scales. And it is in order to keep this peculiarity before the eyes of the organist, that we give to the designation of the key. In prelude before chants of the third tone, the organist may terminate in a key a fourth above the final of the scale. If, then, he should prefer the pitch given in the first place, (marked Key, C sharp minor,) he will prelude in F sharp minor; if that given in the second place, in G minor; and so on of the rest. Or, the prelude might terminate, especially when the chant begins on the final, on the major chord of the final, introduced in the manner illustrated by the examples which we give at the end of this note

The peculiar character of the third and fourth, or, as they are called, Phrygian tones, and their dissimilarity to the modes of modern music may be seen by the following examples, showing the regular manner of harmonizing the most usual final cadences of chants belonging to these two tones. A harmonization of this kind (and it is scarcely necessary to say that it is intended, not for voices, but for the organ only,) will perhaps appear strange, and, for final cadences, unsatisfactory to many; yet it is justified by the practice of such masters of harmony as Bach, Graun, and others. The melody in each of the following examples represents a final cadence peculiar to the third or fourth tone.

The figure displays four musical staves, each representing a different key for the Fifth Tone. At the top, a single staff shows the square notes of the scale: Fa, Sol, La, Si, Do, Re, Mi, Fa, Mi, Re, Do, Si, La, Sol, Fa. Below this are four staves, each with a treble clef and a key signature. The first staff is for D major (one sharp) with dominant A, showing a scale with a sharp on Si and a chant line. The second staff is for E-flat major (two flats) with dominant B-flat, showing a scale with flats on Si and Fa, and a chant line. The third staff is for E major (two sharps) with dominant B, showing a scale with sharps on Si and Fa, and a chant line. The fourth staff is for F major (one flat) with dominant C, showing a scale with a flat on Si and a chant line. Each scale is marked with 'F' at the beginning and end. The chant lines are labeled 'Di-xit Dominus.' and feature a fermata over the final note.

NOTE.—In each of the above scales the fourth is made superfluous by the addition of the sharp or natural, in order to correspond with the square note above it. Sometimes, however, the fifth tone is found with the flat at the beginning of each staff, affecting every Si in the course of the chant. In such a case, of course, the accidental sharps or naturals occurring in the above scales are to be disregarded, and the fourth becomes perfect. Some authors (Pernarelli, Berti, and others.) maintain that the perfect fourth, in other words the flat on Si, belongs to the nature of the fifth tone, and of its plagal the sixth. At least, the present Roman practice is to flat the Si in these tones, in terminate, as in the case of the third tone, on a key a fourth above the final of the scale, i. e., in A minor, B flat minor, B minor, or C minor, according to the choice he shall make out of the above scales. Or, the prelude may terminate on the major chord of the final itself, (see examples on the preceding page,) especially if the chant should begin on the final. Or again, according to some authors, the prelude may be made in one of the keys designated in the figure, (fig. 4,) taking their denominations in the modern sense, i. e., in E minor, having F sharpened, and D sharp for sensible note, or in F minor, with G natural, and E natural for sensible note, etc., etc.

NOTE.—The seventh and eighth, or, as they are called, Mixolydian tones, like the third and fourth, or Phrygian tones, (see note, p. 110,) cannot, on account of their peculiar construction, be reduced to the modern major mode, so as to become identical with it. The organist will experience the truth of this observation when he attempts to harmonize on the organ chants of these tones, especially those which frequently descend below the final, instances of which are the Antiphons Occurrunt turbæ,<sup>1</sup> and Vidi aquam.<sup>2</sup> The sub-final in the Mixolydian tones is a whole tone below the final, and on this sub-final frequent cadences are made; so that if a chant of the kind mentioned above, of the seventh tone, were played e. g. in D, or, of the eighth, in G, in the former case the chord of C, and in the latter that of F, would play a conspicuous part in the harmony. Moreover,

In fact, if the Si of the fifth tone were to be sung natural, these harmonizers would find themselves at a loss, and would have to give up their thirds, by which the psalm-tone in question would be decidedly the gainer.

by reason of the same peculiarity of the sub-final, in some of the final cadences of the two tones in question the closing chord (of the final) is reached, not, as most generally in the modern major mode, by means of the harmony of the dominant, but through that of the sub-dominant, preceded by the chord of its sub-dominant, (so to speak,) viz: the chord of the sub-final, as in the following example of a common Mixolydian final cadence.

38.—With reference to the pitch for the psalms, the most approved practice is to adopt a uniform note for the dominant, or reciting-note, of each of the nine psalm-melodies. The note usually taken for this purpose is A, (La) as being best adapted for the generality of singers. We have added to each of the foregoing eight figures the first degree of psalm-intonation in the tone which the figure illustrates, and we give below, the first degree of the ninth tone. At the end of every staff marked Dominant, A, will be found the commencement of a psalm-melody, with A for the dominant; so that the sum of the staves thus marked shows, at a glance, the manner of pitching the nine tones on A, (La), as a dominant common to all.

39.—It might, however, sometimes be desirable to chant the psalms on a higher note; moreover, in some of the tones, taking A for the common dominant, the Antiphons would occasionally be too low, especially in the third and eighth tones. Hence, some recommend the adoption of a higher pitch for the dominants. We have therefore given, in the above figures, various degrees of elevation for the dominant in each tone, to be adopted according to circumstances, at the discretion of the organist or director of the choir. We would recommend unity of dominant, as far as it is practicable, throughout the same service. Thus, if, for instance, at Vespers, the first psalm should be of the first tone, and B (S $\grave{e}$ ) should be chosen as the dominant, in preference to A, (La), it would be well, if the voices could bear it, to take the four remaining psalms on the same pitch, especially if the tones sung should be the fourth or fifth, sixth, seventh and ninth. Or, if the first psalm should be, c. g., of the eighth tone, and B flat (S $\flat$ ) should be chosen as the dominant, it would be advisable to take the same dominant in the remaining tones, especially if they should be the second or third, fourth, fifth and seventh.

§ III.—OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE CHOIR.

1. The direction of the choir is confided, in some churches, to the organist, in others, to one of the singers. In the former case, the organist should choose the most competent member of his choir for chief singer, to pre-intone the chants, and act the part of leader in regard to the rest of the choir.

2. The director is responsible for the edifying, exact and artistic execution of the musical part of the ritual: hence he should be a good Christian, a good church-musician, and a good ritualist; in which last essential qualification we include a knowledge of the Latin language, at least, sufficient to enable him to guard his singers against false pronunciation, and to correct the errors under this head which are sometimes found even in books printed for the use of choirs.

3 It is the duty of the director to choose his singers, (allowing only those to sing who can do it properly,) practise them diligently, assign them their several offices and positions in the choir, and determine the degree of height and loudness of voice to be observed by them, according to circumstances, among which must be mentioned the construction and size of the church. In a church in which there is much echo, the singing should not be so high and loud as in one of low ceiling and without echo. But if the church is large, and the number of singers small, and these, too, of weak voices, it would be well to take the chants on a moderately high pitch.

4. In arranging a double choir, the singers should be equally divided between the two sides, with reference to their qualifications rather than to their number; the weak being mixed with the strong voices, the high with the low, and the less skilful with the more expert singers, etc., so that one side may be, as far as possible, the counterpart of the other.

5. Out of the general choir the director should choose a few of the best singers to form a select choir: these will sing the Antiphons, and such pieces of plain chant or figured music as require a more artistic manner of execution.

6. The singers composing the select choir should be appointed by the director, in turn, to act as chanters. It is recommended that chanters be changed one at a time, so that one newly appointed to this office may be guided and supported by one who has filled it before.

7. The director might occasionally assist inexperienced chanters in intoning the Psalms, etc.; yet not too frequently, otherwise they will never acquire confidence in themselves. As a general rule, the director should be ever watchful over his singers, coming to their assistance in due time when necessary, and thus preventing ludicrous mistakes on their part.

8. The chief singer should commence, or pre-intone the chants by a few notes, with a pause on the penultima, (or, if this should be short, on the ante-penultimate,) the choir continuing either from the double bar found in some choral books for that purpose, or at a sign given by the director, if such bars should be wanting.

9. The director should not allow any one to pre-intone who is not able to do it, lest ridiculous mistakes should occur; he should suppress all singing out of tune, all shouting, and all arbitrary harmonising by the singers, and should see that in responding to the celebrant, the choir invariably take up the tone corresponding to his.

10. Should the director see fit to execute some piece of harmonised music, e. g., at the Hymn, etc., he should show his judgment and good taste in his selections; avoiding compositions which are vulgar in their character, and savor of the conventicle, as also such as are too light, and not well adapted to the words of the Liturgy, though in themselves good music; and choosing such pieces as are free from these objections,—compositions, that is, which are classical and church-like at the same time.

11. Finally, the director should understand, and ever bear in mind, how highly important and honorable is the office entrusted to him—an office by which he is associated, in some way, with the sacred ministers of the Church, set apart to preside over and conduct the public worship which she offers to God. It is in his power greatly to contribute, by the proper exercise of his sacred function, to the grandeur, solemnity, and impressive effect of the ritual of the Catholic Church, and this is what the Church with perfect right expects from every one who aspires to fill the office of which we are treating. How often is not the effect of the most beautiful and excellently performed ceremonies greatly diminished, if not altogether nullified, by the bad execution, or bad style of the music accompanying them; whereas, good, church-like music, well executed, always edifies and impresses, and even atones for the imperfect or indifferent performance of the sacred ceremonies. It is to be believed, that if directors of choirs would more frequently consider these things, and their own responsibility, the music of the Church would be in a better state than it generally is at present.

APPENDIX I.

H Y M N S.

NOTE.—This Appendix comprises the tones of all the Hymns sung at Vespers. The greater part of them are taken from the Directorium Chori, (Rome, 1737,) and when several Hymns are found adapted to one and the same tone, it is according to the prescription of that work. There are, however, some Hymn-tones of which Guidetti gives only the pre-intonation, a defect which we have thought best to supply from the Enchiridion Chorale, (Ratisbonne, 1853,) in which work the Hymn-tones not contained in the Directorium Chori are taken from the Hymni totius anni, by Palestrina, (Rome, 1589,) and a work of the same title (Rome, 1581,) by Vittoria. Tones taken from the Enchiridion Chorale are marked with an asterisk—all the rest are from Guidetti.

*We copy this Hymn-tone as it is given in the Enchiridion Chorale, in which work it is set in the third tone (Phrygian). According to the pre-intonation of it in the Directorium Chori, (1737,) it belongs to the first tone, (Dorian,) like the melody of Pange lingua, of which it is evidently an adaptation. The effect of the first tone may be obtained in the hymn in question, by singing Fa each time sharp, as we have marked above.

APPENDIX II.

BENEDICTION OF THE MOST HOLY SACRAMENT.

WHEN the Blessed Sacrament has been exposed, and incensed, the Hymn O Salutaris may be sung,<sup>1</sup> either in plain-chant or in harmony.

O SALUTARIS HOSTIA.

From a Rituale Romanum, Rome, 1847.

O sa - lu - tá - ris Ho - sti - a, Quæ cœ - li pan - dis ó - sti - um : Bella premunt ho - tér - na gló - ri - a : Qui vi - tam si - ne ter - mi - no No - bis do - net in pá - tri - a. A - men.

Immediately after the incensation, or after O Salutaris, where it is sung, follows the Litany of the Blessed Virgin,<sup>2</sup> terminated by its Versicle, and Response, and the Prayer, proper for the season. Sometimes, though not so commonly, a Psalm, or Hymn, or an Antiphon in honor of the Blessed Sacrament is sung, instead of the Litany.

<sup>1</sup> Nothing should be sung during the Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament but what is sanctioned by proper authority, or conformable to approved custom.

The Hymn Tantum ergo is then sung,<sup>1</sup> either in harmony or plain-chant. All bow at the words Venerémur cernui.

TANTUM ERGO.

Slowly and solemnly.

From the Direct. Chori, 1737.

Tantum ergo sacraméntum Ve-nerémur cernu-i: Et an-tí-quum documéntum Novo cedit ri-tu-i: Præstet fides suppleméntum Sénsuum de-fé-ctu-i. Ge-ni-tóri, Geni-tó-que Laus, et ju-bi-láti-o: Salus, honor, virtus quoque sit et benedí-cti-o: Procedénti ab u-tró-que Compar sit laudá-ti-o. A - - men.

The Hymn ended, the following Versicle is sung by two chanters, and the Response by the choir:

℣. Panem de cælo | præstitisti e - is.

℞. Omne delectaméntum | in se ha-bén-tem.

During Paschal Time, and the Octave of Corpus Christi, thus: .

℣. Panem de cælo præstitisti eis. | Al-lelu-ia.

℞. Omne delectaméntum in se habéntem. | Al-lelu-ia.

The Prayer, Deus, qui nobis, etc., is sung with the ferial intonation, terminating like the Versicle, except when another Prayer is added, in which case the inflection at the end is made only in the latter.

When the Blessed Sacrament has been reposit in the Tabernacle, it is usual, in some places, to sing the 116th Psalm, Laudáte Dóminum omnes gentes, etc., to any of the Eight Tones, ad libitum, all the verses being sung as the first, i. e., with the full intonation.

<sup>1</sup> When Te Deum is sung at Benediction, Tantum ergo follows immediately after that Hymn. In this case the Versicles and Responses, and the Prayers, usually sung after the Te Deum (p. 215) are omitted, excepting the prayer, Deus, cujus misericordie, etc., which is chanted immediately after the Prayer of the Blessed Sacrament, Deus, qui nobis, etc.

CHANT OF THE PASSION.

In the Missal, the narrative of the Evangelist is marked C,—the words of our Saviour are marked X—and those of the Scribes, etc., S. The music, as here given, is taken from the "Cantus Gregorianus Passionis," etc., published at Rome, by Monsignor Alfieri.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> We take this arrangement of the Passion from the Catholic Psalmist, Dublin. We have given some additional examples, and made some slight additions in the explanations. The music of the Passion, says the Psalmist, "is so simple and easy, that singers will be able, with the help of what is given here, to sing the Passion from the Missal as easily as if the whole were set to notes. The placing of some marks before the passages where the various Inflections are to be made, would be a great guide." 18

EXPLANATION.—No. 1 represents the note on which C. always begins, and continues until a word or two, or a few syllables, are met with before a colon, or a period, or an interrogation point, each of which has its peculiar inflection. See No. 3 with regard to a comma.—No. 2 shows the inflection made before a period not immediately followed by X or S.—No. 3 represents the inflection before a colon; and before a comma, when this stop occurs after a few sentences not marked by any other stop.—The inflection at No. 4 is made immediately before X.—The monotone, as at No. 5, is used immediately before S, recording the saying of more than one; e. g., S. Non in die festo, etc.—No. 6 shows the inflection before S, recording the words of only one; e. g., S. Quid vultis mihi dare, etc.

WORDS OF OUR SAVIOUR.

✠ Con - sum-má - - - tum est. ✠ Quem quæ - ri - tis?

EXPLANATION.—No. 1 shows how ✠ always begins the first word. The guide indicates the note on which C. ends, immediately before.—On the note marked 2 are recited all the words after the beginnings Nos. 1 and 5, and after a comma, a semicolon, a colon, or an interrogation point, until a word or two, or a few syllables before similar stops, are met with.—No. 3 represents the inflection made before a semicolon, a colon, and occasionally before a comma, and always before an interrogation point not immediately before C. It is sometimes, though rarely, used in the middle of a long sentence.<sup>1</sup>—No. 4 shows the inflection of a period immediately before C. The guide at the end indicates the note on which C. resumes.—No. 5 represents the beginning of a sentence after a period, i. e., after inflection No. 6.—No. 6 is the inflection used before a period not immediately follod by C. and frequently before a colon.<sup>1</sup>—The inflection No. 7 is made before an interrogation point immediately followed by C.—Nos. 8 and 9 show the manner of singing a part marked ✠ containing only one or two words followed by C.

<sup>1</sup> A general rule with regard to the inflections Nos. 3 and 6 is, that when a part marked ✠ comprises several sentences separated by a comma, semicolon, colon, or an interrogation point, these inflections are used alternately, No. 3 being used in the first sentence.

EXPLANATION.—On the note marked 1, a fourth above the last note of C., indicated by the guide, the part marked S. always begins, and continues until a word or two, or a few syllables, are met with before a colon, a period, or an interrogation point, or, generally, before a comma.—The inflection, No. 2, is generally used before a comma, and sometimes before a colon.<sup>1</sup> It is also used in the middle of a long sentence.—No. 3 shows the inflection made before a period immediately followed by C.—No. 4 represents the inflection used before an interrogation point.—No. 5 is the inflection made before a period not immediately followed by C., and frequently before a colon.<sup>1</sup>—No. 6 shows the manner of singing, when a part marked S. ends with a monosyllable.—The remaining examples show the exceptions to the general rules.

<sup>1</sup> A general rule with regard to the inflections Nos. 2 and 5 is, that when a part marked S. comprises several sentences separated by a comma, semicolon, colon, or an interrogation point, these inflections are used alternately, No. 2 being employed in the first sentence.

APPENDIX IV.

FORTY HOURS' EXPOSITION OF THE MOST HOLY SACRAMENT.<sup>1</sup>

---

AT THE PROCESSION, ETC., ON THE FIRST DAY.

WHEN the celebrant has turned with the remonstrance towards the people, two chanters intone the Hymn Pange lingua gloriosi (see p. 148). The remaining lines of the first stanza, and the remaining stanzas are sung by those who take part in the procession, or they may be sung in harmony by a select choir.<sup>2</sup> The fifth and sixth stanzas are not sung during the procession;<sup>3</sup> at the conclusion, therefore, of the fourth stanza, repetition must be made, if necessary, beginning at the second, third, or fourth stanza, (according to the distance the celebrant may be from the High Altar,) or the Magnificat,<sup>4</sup> or some appropriate Hymn or Psalm may be sung.

When the remonstrance is placed on the throne, Tantum ergo, etc., is sung. (See p. 132.) At the conclusion of the stanza Genitori, etc., (the V. Panem de celo, etc., and the Prayer being omitted,) two or three chanters go to the centre of the sanctuary, where they kneel and chant the Litany of the Saints.

THE LITANY OF THE SAINTS, ETC., ON THE THIRD DAY.

WHEN the celebrant, vested in cope, kneels at the foot of the altar, after Mass, the Litany of the Saints, etc., is sung as far as the Versicle and Response, Domine exaudi orationem meam, etc., inclusively. The procession then takes place, during which Pange lingua is sung, as on the first day. The procession being finished, and the remonstrance placed on the altar, Tantum ergo is sung, with the Versicle and Response, Panem de celo, etc. The proper Prayers, with the Versicles and Responses following them, are then chanted, and Benediction is given as usual.

<sup>2</sup> When sung in harmony, the words Pange lingua gloriosi may be repeated by the select choir.

<sup>3</sup> They are sung only when the remonstrance is placed on an altar when all can kneel.

<sup>1</sup> This Litany, with the exception of the Antiphon Sub tuum pręsidium, which is from the Pontifical, is not given as Roman, being taken from a little work published some few years ago by Burns and Lambert, London. It has somewhat of a rhythmical character, for which reason we have introduced the double-breve, which is to be held about as long as the time of two breves. The simple melody of this Litany admits of a great variety of harmonisation by a judicious organist.

<sup>3</sup> To this note are sung the italicised syllables which follow. Care should be taken to avoid accenting or prolonging (as is often done) a short or unaccented syllable occurring immediately before such italicised syllable. The slight accent, or pause to be made, should be thrown back on the nearest syllable which will bear it. Thus, for instance, in the word improvisa, the syllable im will bear being prolonged rather than the syllable pro; in the word invidiis, the syllable in rather than di; in the word mala, ma, rather than la; in the word fornicationis, the first, rather than the second syllable; and so on of other words.

<sup>2</sup> On Holy Saturday, this, and the Invocations following it, should be sung very slowly, so as to end about the time the celebrant is ready to commence Mass.

<sup>3</sup> To this note are sung the italicised syllables which follow. A strong accent should be thrown on the first accented (never on a final) syllable preceding each of them.

<sup>2</sup> The notes, at this part of the Litany, are not sung on the pitch indicated — they are transposed a fourth below. In other words, after the Response Te rogámus, etc., which ends on Do, the chanters intone Agnus Dei, etc., commencing (not on Re, but) on La, and singing La, La, La, Si, Si, etc., while the choir answers on La, Si, Do, La, Si, La. At Christe, audi nos, however, transposition no longer exists; i. e., after the Response Miserere nobis, ending on La, the chanters intone Christe, audi nos, commencing on Do, and continuing as it is written.

MISERERE.

PSALM 50.<sup>1</sup>

Mi-se-ré-re | me-i, De-us: * secúndum magnam | miseri-córdiam tu-am.

2. Et secúndum multitudínem | miserati-ó-num tu-á-rum: * dele | iniqui-tá-tem me-am.

3. Amplius lava me | ab iniqui-tá-te me-a: * et a peccáto me-o munda me.

4. Quóniam iniquitátem meam | e-go co-gno-seo: * et peccátum meum | contra me est sem-per.

5. Tibi soli peccávi, | et malum coram te fe-ci: * ut justificéris in sermónibus tuis, | et vincas cum ju-di-cá-ris.

6. Ecce enim | iniqui-tá-tibus con-céptus sum: * et in peccátis | concépit me ma-ter me-a.

7. Ecce enim | veritátem di-le-xí-sti: * incérta et occúlta sapiéntiæ tuæ | manife-stá-sti mi-hi.

8. Aspérget me hyssópo, | et mun-dá-bor: * lavábis me, | et super nivem de-al-bá-bor.

9. Audítui meo | dabis gáudium et læ-tí-ti-am: * et exultábunt | ossa hu-mi-li-á-ta.

10. Avérte fáciem tuam | a pec-cá-tis me-is: * et omnes | iniquitátes me-as-de-le.

<sup>1</sup> This Psalm may be sung to any of the Eight Tones, and in alternate verses by one or two chanters and the choir. We give it here with the 1st Tone, 5th Conclusion. It is hardly necessary to explain, that the figures over words or syllables indicate to what notes, or groups of notes, they are to be sung. Some groups of two and three syllables are printed in italics, to show that they are sung to one and the same note.

11. Cor mundum | eca in me, De-us: * et spírítum rectum ínnova | in ví-scé-ri-bus me-is.

12. Ne projicias me | a fá-cie tu-a: * et spírítum sanctum tuum | ne áu-feras a me.

13. Redde mihi lætítiam | salu-tá-ris tu-i: * et spírítu | principá-li con-firma me.

14. Docébo iníquos | ví-as tu-as: * et impii | ad te con-ver-tén-tur.

15. Líbera me de sanguínibus Deus, | Deus sa-lú-tis me-æ: * et exultábit lingua mea | ju-stí-tiam tu-am.

16. Dómine, | lábia me-a a-pé-ri-es: * et os meum | annuntiábit lau-dem tu-am.

17. Quóniam si voluísset sacrificíum, | de-dís-sem úti-que: * holocáustis | non de-le-ctábe-ris.

18. Sacrificíum Deo | spírítus con-tri-bu-lá-tus: * cor contrítum et humiliátum, | Deus, non de-

19. Bénigne fac, Dómine, | in bona voluntáte tu-a Si-on: * ut ædificéntur | mu-ri Je-rú-sa-lem.
